DECLARES CUSUMANO TESTIMONY GARBLED

Merchant Asserts That When Sister Was Asked About $35 Paid for Killing of Husband, Answer Was Mistranslated

"Witness Replied That Sister Told Her She Paid 'Them' to Kill Husband, but Interpreter in Translating It Said 'Him'"

Councilor Alexander McGregor, who was absent last week when his colleagues cast a tie vote on Mrs. Cusumano's plea for life, said at the Lafayette Hotel in Portland, Me., last night:

"I shall hear the case of Mrs. Cusumano and that of the man condemned with her with an absolutely open mind, at the meeting of the Council on Wednesday. I think new evidence is all that would justify the granting of commutation, in view of the fact that the court has given a full trial. I think Lieutenant-Governor Lucs was right in ruling that evidence in the records of the trial was not a subject for the Council to consider."

CHARLES D. MALAGUTI, manager of the Columbia Counter Manufacturing Company, No. 349 Congress street, a well known merchant, declared in a signed statement last night that he heard testimony of vital importance incorrectly interpreted at the trial of Mrs. Lena Cusumano and Enrico Mascioli for the murder of the woman's husband at Hull. Here is his story:

I attended the trial of these two for the murder of that man. I was present in court at Plymouth every day and heard all of the testimony, but I did not hear the arguments.

I am anxious to call attention to one part of the testimony of Mrs. Cusumano's sister, which I regard as important. It relates to the words "him" and "them."

I remember distinctly that Mrs. Cusumano's sister was asked by the attorney for the government: "Did your sister tell you while you and she were walking from Moon street to North square that she paid him $35 to kill her husband?"

I recall very clearly that the witness replied that her sister told her she paid "THEM" $35 to kill her husband, but that the interpreter in translating it used the pronoun "HIM."

I don't think this point was explained to the jury. I believe from what testimony I heard at the trial that evidence given by Mrs. Cusumano's sister and daughter did not warrant a verdict of guilty in her case. The man was murdered and some one should be made to suffer for the crime, but the woman should not.

These two defendants were found guilty on circumstantial evidence. The Governor's Council should keep that in mind in dealing with this case. They should be careful before deciding to let two persons go to the electric chair.

Attorney Grady said last night that while he doubted the accuracy and truthfulness of the bunk of the government's evidence, he felt certain, as the court records show, that Mr. Malaguti was mistaken in his hearing and that the testimony of Mrs.

Aviator Parmalee, Wright Man, Killed Before Thousands

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., June 1.—Phillip Parmalee, one of the daring young pupils of the Wright brothers and holder of the American endurance record in aviation, fell to his death today, before the eyes of thousands of visitors, on the Fair grounds here. The expert, who was used to remaining in the air for three hours without accident, had been up only three minutes when a gust of wind caught the tail of his aeroplane and turned it over.

Parmalee clung to the framework, but the plane shot straight to the ground from a height of 400 feet, when it crumpled itself into a shapeless heap in a field.

Officials of the fair and attendants of the hangar rushed across the open fields to the spot where the wreck lay, but Parmalee was dead.

Parmalee, a special protege of Wilbur Wright, who died on Thursday, was a carefully trained airman. Two weeks ago, while he was flying at Venice, Cal., a sea gull flew against the propeller of his aeroplane at a height of 1,000 feet, and the frail craft fell 800 feet before Parmalee could regain control of it.

Today those who were watching with field glasses saw him speed at a mile a minute away from the fair ground. He seemed to be turning to come back when the back of the machine tipped upward and the tailpiece suddenly swung around like the spoke of a wheel, turning the plane bottom up. Head down, with hands clutching the useless levers and the frame, Parmalee fell with the vehicle that had made his fame.

Parmalee was twenty-seven years old. He was born in Michigan and graduated from Ann Arbor. His parents are wealthy holders of farming tracts, and when their son decided to take up aviation as a profession they opposed his plan with fears that are now justified.

SUMMER WEATHER TODAY.

Put on Your Straw Hat for the Frcaster Prmises a Fine Day.

At last the official warm weather Id is off. Today is the Sunday opening of the straw hat season and the weather man has promised both warm and fair.

Thousands will leave the city for the first Summer trip to the beaches. Many will take the first 1912 dip into the ocean.

Today's brand of weather will be a repetition of yesterday's, it was predicted. Boston was a pretty warm spot yesterday, with 80 degrees in the shade. Down at Washington the thermometer went up to 88, and in Arizona the mercury shot as high as 100.

TRIPLE PARACHUTE JUMP.

Harold Cates Performs Daring Feat at Nahant.

One of the first triple parachute drops seen in Massachusetts was successfully made yesterday by Harold D. Cates, twenty-two years old, of Newburyport. Five thousand people saw Cates go up near the Bass Point House, Nahant. When he cut away from the balloon, it looked as if he had become entangled in the parachutes, but after dropping 200 feet it opened, and in the next thousand feet he made the two other jumps, the three parachutes being attached to the trapeze bar. He landed within 200 feet of the spot where he went up.

SAVES TWO FROM GAS.

Chelsea Woman Returns in Time to Rescue Victims.

When Miss Rachel Sheinfeld of No. 27 Elm street, Chelsea, returned home from a trip to a store last night she found her mother, Mrs. Bessie Sheinfeld, and her sister, Mary, sixteen years old, in a stupor and the house filled with gas. An ambulance was called from the Frost Hospital and the mother and daughter were taken there. It was said they would recover.

The gas had been turned on accidentally in the bath room and it had filled the house.

NEW CAR JUMPS TRACK.

First Accident on Opening Day of Cambridge Viaduct.

One of the big, new pre-payment cars on the East Cambridge extension of the Elevated, which was opened to the public yesterday, had no sense of the fitness of things. It marred the opening day by jumping the rails at 4:50 yesterday afternoon, in Lechmere square, at the Cambridge end of the viaduct which connects the Cambridge tracks with the city side. The forward truck wheels left the rails. A half-hour tie-up resulted before the big car was jacked back on the track.

FRIENDS ASK PAROLE FOR FRANK LINEHAN

Former Senator Is Surprised When Told at Deer Island of Move for Release.

REMODELING THE PRISON

"I Would Like to Get Out of Here, but on Account of My Family, Not Myself."

Friends of former Senator Frank J. Linehan, who is serving two years at Deer Island for city lumber frauds, have started a movement to have him paroled by Governor Foss. It is urged by his friends that Linehan is worthy of the same consideration that was given to former Aldermans Battis and former President of the Common Council, Leo McCullough, who were paroled.

Those who are working for Linehan say that he has saved the city thousands of dollars by construction work since his imprisonment at Deer Island.

When Linehan was seen at the island yesterday by an AMERICAN reporter he was busy with his squad of mason's helpers on a new cement roadway.

"That's news to me," said Linehan, when informed what his friends were doing for him. "I would like to get out of here, not because of myself, but on account of my family. I know my wife and children are having a hard time, and I would like to help them. As far as I am concerned, I don't mind being here. I am working hard every day, and the officers are fine, but I do hate to see my family suffer.

"No, I have nothing to say regarding other politicians. Even if I was inclined to 'peach,' this would be no time for me to talk. I shall take my medicine without saying a word.

"I'm sorry I can't talk to you longer, but I want to finish this work up today. Then it can harden over Sunday and will be all right for use Monday. I am glad my friends have not forgotten me."

Built Wall Across Island.

Linehan's first political troubles, which many politicians point to as the beginning of his downfall, evolved around construction work he performed for the City of Boston on the same island down the harbor.

The famous stone wall which runs across the island, separating the section owned by the city of Boston from that part controlled by the government, was the subject of a Finance Commission investigation.

The building of a $10,000 piggery was also the subject of Finance Commission report, which caused the City of Boston to withhold payment from the company of which Linehan was the head.

It is amid these works that he is now serving his sentence.

As soon as Linehan arrived at the island, four months ago, his ability as a mason was at once put to good use. Linehan was willing, and since his incarceration has directed a large squad of prisoners in laying out granolithic walks, renovating the interior of the prison, and even building a new retaining wall for the piggery.

Before Linehan's arrival Penal Institutions Commissioner Fred S. Gore was in Boston on Monday. The old prison building had to be remodelled to comply with the requirements of the health department. The four hundred cells had to be made over into two hundred cells. The cells were too small under the law, and time and again the commissioner had appealed to the City Council for an appropriation, but had never been successful.

When Linehan arrived. The building and cells are constructed of stone partitions between every two cells. Inspectors from the city building department decided that the work would be possible, if done under the supervison of a master mason.

Works as Master Mason.

Linehan got his fellow prisoners busy. The first step has been taken now toward segregating the habitual criminals from those who are sent to the island for short periods on minor offences.

The former senator took the picture of health. He had on a coarse, gray suit, a blue striped shirt, and a regulation visor cap of the institution.

Held for Assault at Sea.

Thomas H. Brown was held in $500 for the Federal Grand Jury by United States Commissioner Hayes, yesterday, on a charge of assaulting Captain Alexander Ross of the schooner Eleanor A. Cressy. It was alleged Brown made an assault while the ship was on the high sea on Memorial Day.

FROM JAMAICA PLAIN.

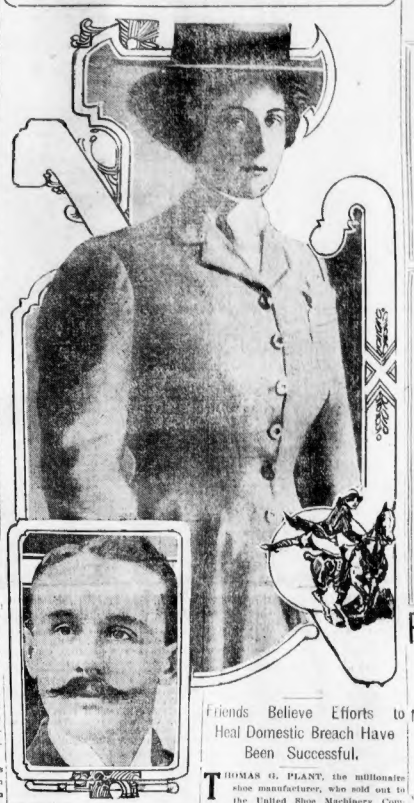
"Divorce" a Forgotten Story

Millionaire Visits Cohasset

MR. AND MRS. T. G. PLANT, SAID TO HAVE "MADE UP."



Friends Believe Efforts to Heal Domestic Breach Have Been Successful.

THOMAS G. PLANT, the millionaire shoe manufacturer, who sold out to the United Shoe Machinery Company for $2,000,000, and his wife, Mrs. Caroline Griggs Plant, who entered suit for divorce January 19, 1911, have become reconciled.

They are not yet living together, but Mrs. Plant, whose home is on one of the most beautiful estates at Cohasset, admitted yesterday that Mr. Plant has visited her Summer home several times in the past year. Mr. Plant was out of town and could not be reached yesterday when the facts of a possible reconciliation became known.

His lawyer, Sherman L. Whipple, when questioned, said:

"As Mr. Plant's attorney I cannot say anything. Why don't you ask Mr. Plant about it?"

"Would the expenditure of several thousands of dollars for improvements on Mrs. Plant's estate by Mr. Plant be considered a part of a separate maintenance for his wife?" was asked Mr. Whipple.

"No," replied Mr. Whipple, "not unless he has agreed to it and perhaps more cordially thus legally. Further, I can't say anything about the case."

At the office of Mrs. Plant's attorneys, Tyler & Young, yesterday, counsel refused to talk. The lawyers admitted that the divorce case had never come to trial and they had not heard from Mr. Plant for a long time.

Mrs. Plant came to Beechwoods, Cohasset, about a year ago, and purchased the Alexander Williams estate, one of the show places of the South Shore. The estate comprises upwards of twenty acres, with a stone house of thirty or forty rooms overlooking the ocean. It is in the heart of the fashionable Summer colony.

All Winter Mrs. Plant has been building large show stables and kennels for her Pomeranians. Those working about the place say the improvements being made upon the estate have reached upwards of $100,000, and most of the checks that have been paid bear the signature of Thomas G. Plant.

Cohasset people in and out of the Summer colony are already commenting on the visits of Mr. Plant to his wife's estate. They have come to know him, his visits have been so frequent.

"Yes, Mr. Plant has been at Cohasset. Further than that I have nothing to say."

HUNT STRANGER FOR HARVARD ROBBERY

"Architect" Carries Off $1,000 Valuables from Stillman Infirmary.

The police of Cambridge are looking for a man representing himself to be an architect from Lynn who gained entrance to the Stillman Infirmary, connected with Harvard University, on Friday, and stole a watch and several rings valued at more than $1,000. The property belonged to students in the hospital.

The man telephoned to the hospital presumably from Lynn, that he was coming.

"We are going to build a hospital in Lynn," he 'phoned, "and I want to look over the Stillman."

"All right, come ahead," he was told.

When he reached the hospital it was arranged so that he could go all through the institution. He left and yesterday it was found that there was missing from clothing of the students the following articles:

A solid gold watch valued at $150.
A ring, set with a sapphire and two diamonds, valued at $100.

The man is described as being between forty and forty years old, five feet seven inches tall. He had gray hair, gray mustache, dark complexion and was dressed in dark clothing and a black derby hat. The Cambridge police told the authorities of other cities about the theft.

Gateman Saves Man.

William Hoffman, fifty-three years old, of No. 33 Pearl avenue, Revere, narrowly escaped death at the Beachmont railroad station when he attempted to board a slowly moving outbound train. He missed his footing and fell between the cars and was being dragged when the crossing gateteader, Cornelius Donovan rushed out and snatched him to safety.

CORPORATION NEWSPAPERS ALONE FIGHT GRAND TRUNK'S ADMISSION

The only opposition which has displayed itself against the coming of the Grand Trunk Railroad to Boston is corporation opposition. The Boston Herald, which is KNOWN TO BE CONTROLLED BY CORPORATIONS, in an editorial Friday showed its true attitude upon this important matter.

The Herald is obstructing a measure which is earnestly desired by the whole people of Massachusetts.

The only other newspaper which has objected to the Grand Trunk is the Boston Traveler. The Traveler is owned by Sidney W. Winslow, president of the United Shoe Machinery Company.

WHAT BY-LAWS OF THE CHAMBER SAY ABOUT UNAUTHORIZED USE OF CHAMBER'S NAME

Statements regarding the attitude of the chamber or its affairs in respect to any matter shall be made public only by the president or board of directors, or through the chairman of this committee or some member or officer delegated by him or the committee.

The by-laws of the chamber provide further that "no statement shall be made to the public as representing the sentiment of the chamber except through the regular channels; that is, by the directors or a general meeting of the members of the chamber.

Name of Commercial Organization Used Without Warrant in an Effort to Amend Bill Before Senate to Admit Road

THE name of the Boston Chamber of Commerce is being used without warrant in an attempt to defeat the Grand Trunk bill in the Legislature. The crisis in the New Haven fight to keep the Grand Trunk out of Boston is due to the State Senate tomorrow afternoon.

William M. Flanders of Newton, a member of the wholesale grocery firm of William M. Flanders & Co., No. 40 India street, is the promoter of one movement within the Chamber to kill off the Grand Trunk.

Flanders a few years ago was chairman of the Finance Committee of the Republican State Committee.

Eldridge Eldridge of Jamaica Plain, a member of the wholesale grocery house of Eldridge, Baker & Co., No. 215 State street, is also performing in a manner calculated to please every interest that wants the Grand Trunk kept away from New Haven territory.

Eldridge, like Flanders, is as much the politician as the grocer. He resides in the Jamaica Plain district of Boston. He has a Summer place in Yarmouthport on Cape Cod and he represents the Yarmouth district in the Massachusetts Senate.

The biggest industry in the Eldridge Senatorial district is the Keith Car Works, which makes railroad cars for the New Haven. The head of the Keith Car Works is the Hon. Elmer S. Keith, the Republican leader of the Cape. Mr. Keith formerly occupied the Senate chair now held down by his friend Eldridge. He has since sat in the Governor's Council.

The eleventh-hour proposition of former Republican State Committee Chairman William M. Flanders is that something be written into the Boston-New England bill "binding the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada."

The intimation of the Flanders movement—somebody has already spent a tidy sum working it up by mail—is that Massachusetts isn't getting the Grand Trunk railway at all, but the Southern New England.

The fact is, as was developed time and again before the Railroad Committee last March, that the Grand Trunk Railway owns all the stock of the Southern New England Railway except the few shares needed to qualify the Massachusetts directors.

But it is apparent to everybody that the Grand Trunk Railway AS the Grand Trunk Railway, a foreign corporation subsidized by the Dominion government, cannot come to Boston. The petitioner before the Legislature, therefore, as everybody has known all along, is the Southern New England Railroad Company.

To try to force another corporation into the pending bill at the eleventh hour will be to kill the bill and keep the Grand Trunk out of Boston.

Any Senator who votes for the Flanders proposition tomorrow will know exactly what he is doing. The proposition is five months old at the State House. The Senator who votes with Flanders will vote to keep the Grand Trunk out of Massachusetts.

The Eldridge Amendment.

Far more ominous and far more dangerous at this stage of Grand Trunk legislation is the Edric Eldridge amendment, because the Senator Eldridge amendment is already tagged on to the Grand Trunk bill. The Senate put the Eldridge amendment on last Wednesday night, 23 to 14.

It was said at the State House Wed-

FOSS' FATHER, ILL, PASSES 82D YEAR

Many Gifts of Flowers Cheer Aged Patient on Birthday at Jamaica Plain Home.

Many fragrant floral gifts found their way yesterday to the home of George Edmund Foss, the father of Governor Foss, in Jamaica Plain. It was the eighty-second anniversary of the venerable man's birth.

The aged man is seriously ill and in the hands of doctors and nurses. Yet when the flowers were placed in the sick room they seemed to cheer him a great deal. He told Mrs. Foss to thank those who remembered him.

Mr. Foss has been ill for five years. There is little hope that he will recover, yet he is a cheerful patient. His wife is at his side to assist, when she can, the nurses in taking care of him.

Governor Foss' wife and daughters are now at their Cohasset home, but are in close touch with the home of the sick man. Efforts are being made to keep Mr. Foss as quiet as possible. The doctor has said that quiet will do him more good than anything else.

HAMMOND TO AID TAFT.

On Way Home from Europe to "Jump Into Fight."

LONDON, June 1.—Passengers on the Mauretania, which sailed from Liverpool for New York today, included former Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, Governor Dix of New York and Mrs. Dix, and John Hays Hammond, who headed the Panama Pacific Exposition Commission. Mr. Hammond, describing the European tour of the commissioners, said: "The tour was a pronounced success. I am returning to jump into the fight for President Taft." Mr. Aldrich said: "I shall be the happiest man in America because I shall have no part in the presidential campaign."

CLAUDE ALLEN GUILTY.

Convicted in Second Degree and Gets Fifteen Years.

WYTHEVILLE, Va., June 1.—The jury in the trial of Claude Allen, accused of murder in connection with the Amherst County Courthouse killing, this afternoon returned a verdict of second degree murder and fixed his punishment at fifteen years in the penitentiary.

MISQUOTED CHAMBER TO BEAT GRAND TRUNK

nesday night that the Chamber of Commerce was also behind the Eldridge amendment.

The Chamber of Commerce is on record in favor of the pending bill. The Chamber of Commerce does not want the Eldridge amendment. The Chamber of Commerce is not in favor of the William M. Flanders scheme.

Like the William M. Flanders proposition—that the Grand Trunk be called by its name in the bill instead of by the name of its New England subsidiary—the Eldridge amendment is innocent enough on its face. It provides that:

The Southern New England Railroad Company shall not, at any time, charge, demand or receive, a greater sum for transportation by it of freight from any point of origin, for the same distance and under like conditions, on any lines operated by it or in connection with it, to the port of Boston for export to foreign countries, than is at the same time received by it for transportation of the like class for export to foreign countries.

"Preventing Discrimination."

The New Haven got some votes for this amendment to the Grand Trunk bill on the plea that it would "prevent discrimination against the port of Boston."

The answer of the Grand Trunk management is that unless there is a general law of this kind, applicable to all the railroads alike, the Eldridge amendment is a discrimination against the Grand Trunk, and such a discrimination as must keep the Grand Trunk out of Boston.

The fight in the Senate tomorrow, then, to make the New Haven Railroad take its hands off the Grand Trunk bill will be double-barreled.

First, the Eldridge amendment must be killed or the Grand Trunk bill will come to Boston.

Second, the William M. Flanders, alleged Chamber of Commerce movement must be headed off. The Grand Trunk Railway CORPORATION of Canada cannot come to Boston. It is a foreign corporation.

The fight to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston has therefore reached a crisis.

The New Haven is making its fight against the Grand Trunk in characteristic-like manner. Most of the Grand Trunk officials in New England are probably on their way back to Boston from the dedication of the Grand Trunk's palatial new hotel in Ottawa, the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. Baxter's Opinion.

The Hon. Charles S. Baxter, of counsel for the Grand Trunk, was on deck last night, however, to set the bill he thinks of the eleventh-hour ambuscades.

Mr. Baxter is the former mayor of Medford. He is probably the most widely known as the head of the victorious Roosevelt ticket in the contest for seats in the delegation to Chicago.

"I never heard about the Flanders movement," Mr. Baxter said to the AMERICAN, "and while of course it is annoying, I cannot truthfully call it surprising. It is quite in line with the usual methods of our opponents.

"The Flanders proposition is a violent one, and, if carried out, would have one effect, the killing of the Grand Trunk bill.

"And while I am on the subject I can say exactly the same of what was first called the 'Brown' amendment but is known now as the 'Eldridge' amendment. The 'Eldridge' amendment, if finally written into this bill, would discriminate against the Southern New England in favor of the New Haven. If the 'Eldridge' amendment is to be enacted into law it ought to be made to apply to all the railroads of New England.

"Today we find the New Haven trying to have the 'Grand Trunk' tacked on to the pending bill. I am informed that this Flanders proposition was yesterday offered to several Senators with the hope that one of them would propose it in the Senate tomorrow. So far as I am informed tonight all of them declined it.

Trying to Kill the Bill.

"The idea was to offer this Flanders' plan with the suggestion that it comes from the Chamber of Commerce and that the Chamber wants it passed. As a matter of fact the Board of Railroad Commissioners, the Directors of the Port of Boston, the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the Fruit and Produce Exchange and the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange are all of them officially on record in favor of the pending bill. Not one of these organizations has any reason to doubt that this is Grand Trunk legislation. It has remained for the New Haven Railroad to have its organization named now. Nobody is more certain that the Southern New England is the Grand Trunk than the officials of the New Haven.

"If the Flanders proposition bobs up in the Senate it will be presented and the Mulligan amendment was presented to kill the bill. Judge Mulligan proposed the cutting out of one of the connecting links in the bill. He admitted that he knew this would kill the bill. The Senate killed his amendment, instead.

"Must Be Headed Off"

"Both these propositions must be headed off. The Eldridge amendment because it is the grossest discrimination against the Grand Trunk to bind it by regulations which do not apply to its rivals here, and the Flanders movement because the foreign Trunk corporation cannot be here any further than in its ownership of all the stock of the Southern New England for all hope of getting the Grand Trunk for Boston and Massachusetts will have to be abandoned.

"The situation is exactly as perilous as that. The crisis has come. This bill has now been tied in the Senate more than one week. It was passed by the House in a day. At the tenth hour it received the official final approval of the Board of Railroad Commissioners. The amendments and the fears that the savings banks is perfectly aggreeable to the Grand Trunk.

"But at the eleventh hour there have appeared these two propositions calculated to delight the New Haven Railroad and to defeat the Grand Trunk away."

The AMERICAN succeeded in getting in touch with William M. Flanders. Paid solicitors are said to have been peddling the petition around. What Mr. Flanders has to say for himself appears later on.

MR. FLANDERS TELLS HIS ATTITUDE UPON GRAND TRUNK BILL

Mr. Flanders was seen by an AMERICAN reporter at his desk in his wholesale grocery store. He was asked:

Q—Mr. Flanders, are you the author of this petition. A—I am.

Q—How did you come to interest yourself in the matter? A—I noticed that the bill did not bind the Grand Trunk to do anything for Boston.

Q—And this has been before the Legislature for some weeks. Why did you wait so long before circulating your petition? A—I had not studied the bill until a few days ago. The first thing that attracted my attention to it was the fact that they are going to build a railroad through Newton, where I live.

Q—Do you oppose such a road? A—Oh, no. But it interested me in the bill I studied it, and then I found that we must have that road or bring the Grand Trunk up to anything.

A—Did you consult anybody about your petition? A—No. I didn't consult anybody.

Q—Did you ask a lawyer or a legislator if your amendment is practical? A—No.

Q—Do you know if your amendment is practical? A—No, I don't, but it must be.

Q—Did you know that your proposed amendment would kill the bill? A—I didn't think it would.

Q—Did you know that experts had been studying the bill to safeguard the interests of Boston? A—I saw that they had left a big loophole, and left us unprotected.

Q—Wouldn't it have been more proper if you had called your objections to the attention of the directors of the Chamber of Commerce instead of getting signatures from members of the Chamber on your own hook? A—Well, perhaps it would. I didn't think to do it.

Q—This petition has caused you considerable personal expense, has it not? A—Not very much. A few dollars for printing and postage.

Q—Are you satisfied with your result? A—I wish I had never mixed up in the thing. I never thought it would make such a commotion. I am not looking for any publicity, and I don't want my name mentioned any more than you can help. All I wanted to do was to let the Senate see that we wanted Boston properly safeguarded before the bill was passed.

If This Isn't the Grand Trunk, Mr. Flanders, What Is It, Please?

The Southern New England Railroad Corporation of Massachusetts, organized under your statutes, IS CONTROLLED BY THE GRAND TRUNK, THROUGH THE OWNERSHIP OF THE ENTIRE CAPITAL STOCK, EXCEPT THOSE SHARES NECESSARY TO QUALIFY THE DIRECTORS, and this is also true of the Southern New England Railway Company, organized under the special charter granted by the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island.—President E. H. Fitchugh of the Grand Trunk's New England system to the Committee on Railroads, March 6, 1912.

HOW INNOCENT SENATORS MIGHT GET THE IDEA FROM THE WILLIAM M. FLANDERS LETTER AND ENCLOSED POSTAL CARD THAT FLANDERS REPRESENTS THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. THIS IS THE FLANDERS' LETTER:

A considerable number of members of the Chamber of Commerce have already signed a petition similar to the postal card which I enclose herewith.

Believing that many other members of the Chamber of Commerce would desire to sign such a petition, I am sending you the enclosed postal card.

The undersigned members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce urge the Legislature to put into the Southern New England bill some clause whereby the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall be bound to develop the port of Boston and give Boston as favorable rates as the other seaports receive. The bill should be so amended that the Grand Trunk cannot shield itself behind any claim that it is only the Southern New England that is bound. Unless this can be done, we protest against the passage of the bill.

Resolved, That the Boston Chamber of Commerce HEARTILY ENDORSES THE APPLICATION OF THE SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND, OR GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY, for a charter to extend its lines into Boston, as promising to be of immense advantage to New England generally and to Boston in particular, and hereby authorizes the Transportation Committee to appear before the appropriate committee of the Legislature and advocate the granting of the charter.

MRS. CUSUMANO NEAR A NERVOUS COLLAPSE

Cusumano's sister and all others was carefully and correctly translated.

The latest witness in the case came forward voluntarily, because he felt it was his duty. He wants justice to prevail. He is not related to either of the condemned persons. He thinks a serious mistake has been made, in the case of the woman especially.

Counsel for the condemned asserted before the Executive Council last week when an informal vote showed 7 to 1 against commuting the sentence and a tie of 4 to 4 in the woman's case, that testimony might have been incorrectly translated, inadvertently or otherwise. Now that Mr. Malaguzzo comes forward with his claim, they are wondering if other sentient bits of evidence were not improperly interpreted also.

Mrs. Cusumano had a number of visitors yesterday. The Rev. Father Michael J. Murphy, prison chaplain, spent a long time consoling her in the morning and also visited the cell of Mascioli, in the afternoon. Attorney William J. Coughlin of Abington called at 2:10 and spent more than an hour between his client.

Thirty minutes later Mrs. Cusumano's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Cusumano, of Stoughton, called. They also saw Mrs. Maria Trimboello and Joseph Laurie of No. 3 Bulfinch street.

The report that Mrs. Cusumano's cell was to be decorated with flowers is denied by the prison authorities. Two bouquets were sent to her Memorial Day, but they were kept in a chair outside her cell. She is watched by a woman guard, the first ever to undergo such a vigil, not only at the Charlestown institution, but in the State, and Mrs. Cusumano remarked on the first day she brought her gifts that was more evident than she.

But Mrs. Cusumano has gradually lost her composure. She was unusually calm and often cheerful during her year at the Plymouth jail but her stole bearing gave way soon after her arrival at the death house.

Ignorant of the laws of the land, with a childish idea of the electric chair which is scarcely a dozen paces from her cell, unable to read or write, the little Italian woman, mother of several children for whom she constantly asks, is in a nerve-racking predicament.

Realizes Her Peril

At last the full peril of her situation has come to her.

Everything with which she might be apt to kill or maim herself has been removed from her cell, even common pins and hairpins. A black Japanese screen of the folding type has been spread across the bars of the cell. The woman attendant is always on the alert, and should help be needed the guard can summon the help of the most turnkeys.

Attorney Thomas J. Grady said last night:

"Mrs. Cusumano feels her position keenly and suffers. She came shortly after she reached the death house.

"I had a talk with her and was with her, talking and cheering her up, but after a time I was overcome and broke and frightened.

"I am afraid of her predicament. There she is, a poor, ignorant foreigner, unable to read, write or do anything to occupy her mind."

Councillor Alexander McGregor, whose absence last week from the board left a tie on the question of commuting the sentence of Mrs. Cusumano and Mascioli, left for Maine tonight from Cushman Lake, Me.

It is understood that he is opposed to commuting the sentence of Mrs. Cusumano and Mascioli. He has Governor Foss's assertion that he believes in "upholding and not obstructing the law." Counsel for the condemned man and woman are mustering every available bit of evidence with which to fight the case before the Executive Council next Wednesday.

Attorneys Grady and Coughlin promise that new evidence in the Grand Trunk matter, to which formal action was deferred owing to the tie vote in the case of the women.

They will contradict the claim of District Attorney Barker, that if the testimony of Lucy Cusumano presented by Attorney Lucy were excluded there would remain no evidence to warrant the convictions in the first degree.

They will assert that the only evidence upon which the government was compelled to rely was based upon circumstances, and that the greater part of it was hearsay and from a doubtful source.

They will charge that District Attorney Barker was so uncertain about his evidence that he refused to present it to the jury. It was not sure about drafting the indictment, the form of which they argue, reflects their contentions.

"District Attorney Barker," said Attorney Grady last night, "argued before the Governor's Council that he had proved a case even were Lucy without the testimony of Lucy Cusumano, whom we claim to be a feeble-minded child.

"That claim is far-fetched. Let us see what other evidence he has. Every scrap of it is hearsay. Without that child's testimony we were forced to depend entirely upon the very doubtful statements of Salvatore Pasquale, who feared he would be charged with the crime when arrested and has since fled the country; the statement of Mrs. Rudolgato, the sister, and another who tells one story one time and another some other time.

"As proof of the little faith District Attorney Barker had in the government witnesses we propose to refer to the indictment returned against Mrs. Cusumano and Mascioli. In the government's bill the man and woman are charged jointly and severally with having committed the murder and under another count they are charged with committing it.

"The doubt of the prosecutor is further evidence," and in our opinion very eloquently, by the fact that one count charges that the killing was done with a knife, another with an axe and there is the additional clause that it was done with some implement unknown to said jurors."

'BLOCKING GRAND TRUNK HURTS CITY,' SAYS FAHEY

John H. Fahey, member of the board of directors of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, said last night:

"It seems to me the petition must have been started under a misapprehension as to the effect of such an amendment as is proposed. I do not think it would kill the bill. I do not think it would prevent the passage of any considerable number of business men, unless through a misunderstanding of its significance.

"The Grand Trunk bill as it now stands has been considered by the membership of the Chamber of Commerce, its transportation committee and the directors, during the various months of its development for several months.

"The Grand Trunk petition for entrance was reported by the directors to a meeting of the members some time ago and immediately approved. If I am not mistaken, the vote was unanimous. Since then many features of the bill have been carefully considered by the transportation committee and directors.

"As a member of the board of directors I have never heard of any suggestion from members of the Chamber that the organization should ask for such an amendment as that proposed. If there has been any sentiment for amendments of this kind, it would seem as if they should have been put up to the directors and brought before the membership in open meeting weeks ago.

"I do not wish to speak as representing the sentiment of the board of directors on this particular suggestion, for it has not been presented to the board of directors as sent out to the members, and I have no right to speak for them.

"My personal opinion is that an amendment of this sort is not needed. I cannot conceive of the Grand Trunk Railroad wishing to spend immense sums of money to secure an entrance to the city of Boston for the fun of it. If there is any feature of this sort comes in here, it cannot fail to be of enormous benefit to the city, the State and all of its citizens.

"In the discussion of the Grand Trunk bill it has been understood that the Grand Trunk as a Canadian road could not make a direct contract such as that suggested.

"Personally, I do not see that such a thing is needed, and if the result should be any menace to the friends of the Grand Trunk bill, at this stage, I should consider it a great misfortune to the city and State.

"As I have said, I feel very sure that this petition must have been started through a misunderstanding of its possible effect. I feel sure that some of the men whose names have been mentioned as having signed it would not support it under other conditions."

REPORT IS RUMORED TO CLEAR LOMBARD

Coast Artillery Colonel, Accused of Mismanagement, Hasn't Heard Yet.

Colonel Walter E. Lombard, commander of the corps of the Coast Artillery, stated last night he did not know whether he had been exonerated or found guilty by the military board which heard charges against him. The charges were preferred by Capt. Calvin S. Tilden. They accused Lombard of impairing the efficiency of the regiment by mismanagement.

The report of the investigating board has been filed at the State House by Judge Advocate-General William C. Rogers, although the finding were not made public, it was rumored none of the charges was sustained. The Judge Advocate-General will make recommendations to Governor Foss.

Murray Says Wiley May Come to Boston

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1.

Boston AMERICAN, Boston:—

In reply to your inquiry I am pleased to report that I have made an appointment with Dr. Harvey W. Wiley for Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, when I shall represent to the pure food champion the desire of Mayor Fitzgerald that Dr. Wiley take the chairmanship of the Boston Board of Health.

I am also pleased to say that I really believe Dr. Wiley is likely to accept the offer of His Honor the Mayor.

(Signed) MURRAY.

New Wakefield Teacher.

John B. Sawyer of Groveton, N. H., graduate of Bates college and principal of Groveton High School for three years, has been elected teacher of science at Wakefield High School.

STUDENTS SERENADE THE MUNSTERBERGS

Professor Hugo Munsterberg, the noted psychologist of Harvard celebrated his forty-ninth birthday yesterday. Mrs. Munsterburg held a joint celebration with her noted husband. She was born on the same day of the month, but not in the same year.

As a mark of appreciation and respect, 200 German students of the college, gathered on the campus last night, and forming in line, marched to the home of the professor and his "frau," on Ware street, Cambridge.

They cheered and sang German songs. Professor Munsterberg stood on the verandа of the house and, with his wife by his side, thanked the students. Mrs. Munsterberg waved her handkerchief. With "Fair Harvard" ringing in their ears, the professor and Mrs. Munsterberg bowed their thanks.

Beachey Glides 4,000 Feet to Saugus Field

SAUGUS, June 1.—More than 10,000 people saw Lincoln Beachey stop his engine 4,000 feet in the air and volplane to the aviation field directly in front of the grand stand. He was up almost a mile. It was the last day of the aviation meet at Atwood park, and all of the airmen were there, including Beachey, Harry N. Atwood, Frank J. Ferrell, Louis Paulman and Phillip Page.

Besides the air races there were several motor-cycle events. In one of these Beachey competed in his biplane and lapped the field once in the two-mile race. One of the features of the afternoon was the carrying of mail from the field to Lynn. Atwood ran the plane while Freeman took charge of the mail. When the machine reached the Lynn Common, Freeman threw the bag over. It was picked up by a letter carrier and taken to the Post Office.

Professor Carl Bonnette made a thrilling double parachute jump. He reached an altitude of 4,000 feet, dropped 1,000 feet in the first parachute, then bumped to the ground on the patch called him to earth. He landed in the Lynn marshes.

The fourth of Boston won the ten mile stock motor race, with Edgar C. Hanes second. In the two-mile motorcycle race Edward Dupont finished first by fifteen feet.

SCHOOL BARS GIRL; TOWN FACES A SUIT

It may cost the Selectmen of Wakefield $5,000 because they sustained Principal Charles H. Howe in suspending Miss Hanna Wulf from the Wakefield High School. Miss Wulf was suspended because her step-father wouldn't let her go to school. He kept her home because he didn't like the bookkeeping class methods of the teacher in the Wakefield High School.

It seems the teacher, in order to lessen her own work, left the answer book to the bookkeeping problems in the hands of a pupil, Miss Helen North.

Miss North marked Miss Wulf wrong when Miss Wulf thought she was right, and she accused Miss North of doing it purposely. She was supported by her stepfather, Adam Kiernan, who insisted that the teacher either mark the class herself or let another pupil than Miss North do it.

Newburyport Curfew Works Like a Charm

NEWBURYPORT, June 1.—This town has curfew beginning tonight. All boys and girls under fifteen, not accompanied by parents or guardians, will be gathered in by City Marshal McLean and his devoted band of twelve policemen from this time on.

The City Council some weeks ago told the City Committee on Police to get a curfew. Somebody got poetical and recited the whole of "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight," at the meeting. The Committee on Police was much impressed with the poem especially that part where the beautiful maiden gets hold of the bell and prevents it ringing.

"Suppose somebody should try that in Newburyport," it was suggested.

"We'll fool them," declared the city marshal. "We won't have a bell, we'll have a whistle."

So a steam whistle blew last night at nine by the town clock. In five minutes there wasn't a kid loose in Newburyport.

CALL JOB HARRIMAN AS DARROW WITNESS

LOS ANGELES, June 1.—Job Harriman, recent Socialist candidate for Mayor of Los Angeles, and a member of the McNamara counsel, has been subpoenaed as a witness in the Clarence S. Darrow bribery case by the prosecution.

The District Attorney has also subpoenaed Lecompte Davis, who was one of the McNamara counsel. Bert Franklin testified yesterday that Harriman went into an adjoining office with Darrow and in a few minutes Darrow came out and gave him the $4,000 which he used in the bribery of George N. Lockwood.

Darrow, he said, did not have the money in the office until Harriman arrived. Franklin testified that Davis planned for Franklin to confess and get off with a fine to be paid by the McNamara defense to return for Franklin's agreement to keep Darrow's name out of the case.

CRISIS IS NEAR IN 'L' UNION DEMAND

Men Hold Midnight Meeting Tomorrow to Await Reply of Company.

W. D. Mahone, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street & Electric Railway Employes is scheduled to arrive in Boston tomorrow to assist in straightening out the tangle resulting from the organization of the Boston Elevated Railway's employes.

Following the presentation of the men's demands to the company tomorrow, which they say will be laid on the desk of General William A. Bancroft, president of the Elevated, the union men will meet at midnight in Wells Memorial Hall to receive the report of their wage-scale committee.

The demands to be presented by this committee call for the reinstatement of certain men, twenty-eight cents an hour for first year "surface" conductors and motormen, thirty cents for second year men, and thirty-two cents the third year. For "elevated" men, they want thirty cents the first year, thirty-two the second, and thirty-five the third year.

To Present Demands.

The pay for guards is set at twenty-five cents for the first year, twenty-seven the second, and twenty-nine the third, with allowances of twenty-three cents, twenty-five and twenty-seven for brakemen.

At present the highest pay for either of these classes of labor is from twenty-three cents an hour the first year, to twenty-six and one-half cents after sixteen years of service. Arbitration of all future grievances is offered by the men's union, and the time set for their proposed agreement to expire is June 1, 1912.

"Loyals" See Bancroft.

In marked contrast with the attitude of the union, the so-called "loyal" or non-union employes of the Elevated, assert that they are perfectly content with conditions. In resolutions adopted at a mass meeting held in Mechanics' Building, they declared that they always had been treated fair and that they preferred to do business with the company direct, outside the union.

The "loyals" were later received by General Bancroft and other officials of the Elevated, and commended for their stand. In a semi-official report of this conference it is asserted that General Bancroft outlined the position of the Elevated, as follows:

Position of the Company.

To render the best possible service to the public.

To pay to those who had invested their money in the company a fair return upon such investment.

To not only pay to the men as good wages as the financial condition of the property would permit, but to treat them with the utmost fairness as men at all times.

General Bancroft further stated that the management of the company has been sincere and earnest in their efforts to carefully preserve and weigh all matters presented by employes.

It should be borne in mind that the company has progressed with tremendous strides in rendering to the public rapid transit, having taken upon itself enormous burdens in the way of additional subways, tunnels, etc., and has raised the rate of pay of the men four times, during the past few years; that it has endeavored to improve conditions under which the men work with particular regard to securing them of a living minimum wage, of stripe money, gold medals, pensions and assistance of every kind.

General Bancroft explained to the men that he was glad to have the company carefully examine and look into any conditions which might now exist which affected the welfare of the employes, and if the company would make such examination and investigation as it seemed wise, he would be glad to take up with the men every detail which affected the men's welfare.

While he said he did not pretend that all the existing conditions were absolutely perfect he believed the company had been fair in its attitude toward its employes, and in the future, as in the past, was anxious to consider and rectify any unsuitable conditions.

The committee received General Bancroft's remarks with much interest and left with the understanding that it would meet in the immediate future and examine into conditions existing in the various divisions with a view to studying any conditions susceptible of improvement and again meet General Bancroft.

Above is the Hon. John F. Fitzgerald, Mayor of Boston, as he appears in the moving pictures. They show every little movement of his jolly countenance, just as he may be seen on his farm any day, or even at City Hall. These particular pictures, however, were taken at Palm Beach, when he was there this Spring.

WOMEN REBELS DIE IN CUBAN BATTLE

Americans Are Held for Ransom; Many Federals Killed; Marines Ready to Land.

HAVANA, June 1.—There is desperate fighting in Oriente province. Hundreds of federal soldiers and rebels have fallen. Women are among the dead.

Though two Americans are held for ransom, no marines have been landed yet. If the situation continues to be as serious as at present it is thought action by the United States naval officers will not be delayed much longer.

Dispatches received this afternoon say 100 federal soldiers were killed and 30 wounded in fighting between government troops and rebels under General Estenoz and Iribiet in Oriente.

The French consul has lodged a complaint with the Cuban government because of devastation of French-owned plantations by the insurgents.

Americans Kidnaped.

Two Americans named Collister and Wheeler have been seized by negro rebels on their ranch near Daiquiri and are held for ransom. Consul Holaday has left for Daiquiri to demand their release.

No marines have been landed from the Paducah at Daiquiri, or the Nashville at Nuevitas. Ten commanders of both vessels are prepared for immediate action.

Eighteen women fighting alongside of the men in the ranks of the rebels were shot and killed in a battle between an insurgent horde and government forces at Moyala, near Palma Soriano. One hundred and twenty-seven rebels fell, and many were wounded. Those who were not captured fled before the mounted rurales. These details of the battle, which occurred yesterday, were received here today. After the battle the bodies of the women were found in the field.

The rebels were surprised in their camp, and federal artillery planted on neighboring heights, swept the rebel stronghold. General Montenegro, commander-in-chief of the federals in Oriente province, has ordered 500 more from the command and ordered them to Sigua Bacana, near Daiquiri, to guard American residents.

The rebels and rural guards fought a skirmish near Daiquiri early today. A sergeant of the rural guard was killed. All miners in that section are abandoning their work. Luis Gomez, believed to be a rebel conspirator, was arrested today as he was about to sail for Santo Domingo. It is reported two high government officials are also involved.

Ready to Land Marines.

It is pointed out by persons here conversant with the situation, that while marines have not yet landed, Commander Mitchell of the Paducah, is acting under orders to land a force on shore if it becomes necessary to protect American life and property, and he is free to act on his own discretion.

With an American gunboat stationed on each side of the entire south coast of Cuba, prepared to land forces at a moment's notice and ready to dispatch to Daiquiri, point where foreign interests may be threatened, it is believed there is less danger of molestation of American-owned plantations and mining properties.

But, as the Cuban government has been informed by the State Department, American naval commanders have been fully authorized to land parties of marines and bluejackets wherever there are no Cuban government forces to guard exposed plantations.

It is realized the Cuban government will have a difficult task to provide guards for all the foreign-owned properties in Oriente and yet retain a sufficient force to repel attack from the rebel leader. It is believed it will be several weeks before General Montenegro can assemble an army large enough for a successful campaign.

HEARST FUND FOR ROSTRON TOMORROW

Carpathia's Captain the Guest Today of Mrs. John B. Thayer, Titanic Widow.

The purse contributed solely by readers of the New York American for Captain Arthur H. Rostron, of the Cunard steamship Carpathia, brave rescuer of the Titanic's 705 survivors, will be presented to him tomorrow morning. The purse amounts to TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS in gold. It will be handed to Captain Rostron by one of the editors of the American in the presence of all the officers and crew of the Carpathia and some distinguished guests on the deck of the steamship.

PHILADELPHIA, June 1.—The pathetic efforts of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. George B. Widener, Jr., and Mrs. John B. Thayer, to honor Captain Arthur H. Rostron, the young commander of the Carpathia, will continue tomorrow, when Captain Rostron will attend the church of the Redeemer at Bryn Mawr, of which Mr. Thayer was a trustee. Captain Rostron will accompany Mrs. Thayer to the church and will sit in the Thayer pew. A memorial tablet is to be erected to Mr. Thayer.

Friends of the three rich widows whose husbands were lost on the Titanic see in this honoring of Captain Rostron by dinners and other attentions something extremely pitiful.

Mrs. Astor, Mrs. Widener and Mrs. Thayer have enormous wealth at their command and all the social prestige women can desire. Yet the sea robbed them of their husbands, as though mocking their wealth.

The widows, with other Titanic survivors, were saved by the Carpathia. Now these rich women, in simple, earnest sincerity, are trying to show Captain Rostron, the kind-hearted, sympathetic commanding officer of the rescue ship, that they appreciate rightly all he did for them and for the others, even though he could not save their loved ones.

These widows are receiving Captain Rostron as a distinguished guest, each one striving to show her recognition of his courage and kindness.

All Good Ancients Parade Tomorrow

Bands Will Play and Drums Will Beat on 274th Anniversary.

Brrrrum, brumm, brrrum.

Hark to the sound of drums, and the clear sweet note of the bugle. List to the blare of martial music and the measured tread of marching feet. 'Tis the Ancients on parade.

Tomorrow is the 274th anniversary of the founding of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, and all good Ancients will rise early and spend the morning hours polishing their arms and accoutrements, whatever those are.

Every Ancient from Colonel Everett C. Benton down to high private Dick Sears is expected to do his duty tomorrow, whether at parade, or at the table. The Ancients know no such word as quail, although they are very fond of game.

Between the hours of 11 a. m. and 12 noon luncheon will be served at Faneuil Hall. Immediately after, staff, non-coms, flankers and orderly will report to the captain.

Sergeant-major, sergeants and color sergeants will turn up at 12:30, and the troops will be lined up in the Armory and inspected. Lieutenant Philip B. Brace has been appointed officer of the day, and Colonel Sidney H. Hedges has been detailed as guide, philosopher and friend to the commander-in-chief, none other than Governor Eugene N. Foss.

Captain Charles Cushing is chief of staff and to him will report all the honorary staff.

The soldiers will parade from Faneuil Hall through South Market, Commercial, State, Washington, School and Beacon streets to the State House, thence Beacon street, School, Washington, Milk, Congress, High Summer, Winter, Tremont and Boylston streets to the 104 South Church.

From the church the Ancients go to the Common for dress parade and their drumhead election. Don't mention it, but the election is fixed. The officers have already been elected, and this is just a formality.

After the parade the troops return to Faneuil Hall, where a grand patriotic banquet will occupy the evening hours.

At the church the sermon will be by Rev. R. Perry Bush of Chelsea, and the ode will be by Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole of Jamaica Plain.

Farmer Returns Home After a Day of Celebration.

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 1.—George Staples, thirty years old, a farmer living at Angola, a suburb, today shot and killed his mother-in-law, Mrs. Millard F. Brown, wife of a well-known Buffalo lawyer, and fatally wounded his young wife, and then turned the revolver upon himself and committed suicide. The crime took place at the Brown home. Staples, said a team bought by his father-in-law, and had been carousing.

ONE MILLION-MILE FORESTRY PATROLS

WASHINGTON, June 1.—More than a million miles of roadway territory in comparatively sparsely settled sections of the country will be covered daily by a forest fire preventive force of 55,000 men, as a result of an order issued by Postmaster-General Hitchcock. These men are the rural and star route mail carriers.

COMMERCE COURT SAVED BY SENATE

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The Commerce Court, the existence of which was threatened by the provisions of the legislative appropriation bill passed by the House, was saved by the Senate today in the action of the appropriation committee of that body striking out the Commerce Court provision before reporting the bill to the Senate. The bill carries with it an appropriation of $34,537,894.

'JOHN DOE' CARRIES MYSTERY TO GRAVE

"Lifer" in Concord Prison Leaves No Clew to Identity After Suicide.

CONCORD, N. H., June 1.—John Doe, the mysterious prisoner who steadfastly refused to reveal his identity although locked in the New Hampshire State prison for six years, and who hanged himself in his cell on Thursday night, went to his death a mystery still.

On the book of the prison the man was "John Doe" and if a name is placed on a stone to mark his last resting place it will be "John Doe."

Doe was serving a life sentence. There was no hope of pardon. He became discouraged, although he received kind treatment. He made a rope out of part of his mattress and hung himself. He was dead when found.

Doe and a pal named Joseph Gonin robbed a safe in Dover, N. H., boarded a train at Rockingham Junction and killed a man on the train. An exciting chase followed and the men were captured. Doe was sentenced to prison for life and Gonin for thirty years. Gonin escaped from the State hospital for the insane and is still at large.

Real "Jimmy Valentine."

On November 11, 1910, Doe got hold of a knife and, apparently in a fit of insanity, dashed through the prison, stabbing Dr. H. F. Gallinger and Deputy Warden Frank D. Bailey. Then they placed him in solitary confinement. This sent on his nerves.

Doe was a veritable Jimmy Valentine in real life. It will be recalled by those who are familiar with the story, now in Boston, that Valentine could find the combination of the lock of a safe by the sense of touch. Doe could do this.

In the play a little girl gets locked in a vault and she was where Valentine is employed. At the risk of having his true identity known Valentine opens the vault and save the life of the little girl. The effect is witnessed by a detective who wants Valentine for a jail-delivery and sank in Massachusetts, but he was not sure of the man's identity until he saw him open the vault.

The same thing, in a way, took place once or twice since Doe was locked up. Something got wrong with the lock of a vault in Concord and Valentine was allowed to leave prison to see if he could open it. He did so.

Time and time again efforts have been made to induce Doe to tell his true name and give something of his history. But he died with his lips closed so far as telling who he was was concerned.

His Own Brief Story.

This much the man admitted:

"I was a cracksman and I was a good one. But the best get caught. I could open almost any lock by the feel. I either inherited the touch or it came to me through long years of practice. I am an expert mechanic, of course, and know the mechanism of every lock made. I never formed a pal, that would not apply to me if I had the time for the job."

The officials of the prison became deeply interested in the mysterious prisoner. They tried to trap him into admitting who he was, but always failed. They got the impression that he was at the head of a band of safe-crackers and that he hailed from the West.

After Doe was found dead a careful search was made of his cell to see if he had left anything that would throw light on his identity. But nothing was found.

Because of his known ability to open locks and manipulate handcuffs, more than ordinary care was taken that he did not attempt to escape. But he never made such an attempt.

MISS EDITH DEACON, RICH GIRL WHO FINDS CONSOLATION IN ART

MISS EDITH DEACON IS A SCULPTOR NOW

Miss Edith Deacon is now a sculptor and is devoting hours each day to the work at her studio on Commonwealth avenue, but adopted home since her fiancee, George Lee Peabody, died last year on the very eve of their wedding, death resulting from a partial sunstroke at tennis at Newport in a marathon match with Miss Deacon.

Since a child, Miss Deacon has always been clever with the pencil and brush and now, having plenty of spare time, she has followed the lines set down by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney and taken up the same work.

Miss Deacon has visited Mrs. Whitney's studio at Newport on the Cliffs many times. Some of her friends who have seen her work in Boston state it is brilliant.

So far as known Miss Deacon has not as yet placed any of her work on exhibition, but her friends who have seen her working diligently say they believe some of their work will be shown to the public.

Miss Deacon, in addition to the income she receives from the fund left by her father, the late Edward Parker Deacon, receives $10,000 a year from the estate of her fiancee that was. He had left a will drawn leaving her all, but he became too ill to sign the document.

BOSTON WOMEN TO SPEAK.

Will Attend Montpelier Convention of State Clubs.

MONTPELIER, Vt., June 1.—Mrs. Anna Dorsey of Boston will speak on the World Peace Movement through the 'Ark' at the seventeenth annual convention of the State Branch of Women's Clubs, which opens here next Tuesday evening. Mrs. Helen M. Winslow, also of Boston, is to speak on "Women and the Law." More than 200 delegates will be welcomed Tuesday evening at a reception by Mrs. J. B. Estey, president of the local women's club, and her husband, Mayor Estey.

BEEF PROBE THIS WEEK.

House Committee to Take Up Edwards Resolution.

WASHINGTON, June 1. — Chairman Clayton of the House Judiciary Committee said today his committee would begin early next week a preliminary investigation of the beef trust. The committee will take up the Edwards resolution directing the attorney-general to proceed with the prosecution of the trust and probably will summon witnesses and conduct an independent congressional inquiry as soon as the Archbald investigation is concluded.

UNDECIDED ABOUT COURSE FOR JORDAN

Counsel for Condemned Wife Slayer Await Mandate of U. S. Supreme Court.

General Charles W. Bartlett of counsel for Chester S. Jordan, the condemned wife slayer, stated last evening that he and his colleagues had not come to any decision concerning a petition for commutation or any other move to save their client from the electric chair.

General Bartlett said they had held several conferences, but that until they received the mandate of the United States Supreme Court, which a few days ago denied their plea for a new trial, they could not settle upon any definite action.

"We have heard through the newspapers of our failure before the highest tribunal," said General Bartlett, "but, as yet, we have received official notice. When we do we will decide what course to pursue."

The fact that General Bartlett visited Governor Foss at the State House yesterday gave rise to the impression that he had come in connection with a petition for commutation, but he was on other business.

The relatives of Jordan want to have a petition for commutation filed, but pay off the matter entirely with counsel. Jordan is not a Christian Scientist and is constantly visited by G. Leonard McNeil, of Cambridge, formerly first reader in the Christian Science Church of that city.

Jordan has become a student of Mrs. Eddy's doctrines, and according to Mr. McNeil has found solace in the Christian teachings. Mr. McNeil has been making weekly visits to the cell of the prisoner for a year, and at the Cambridge home will continue to act as his spiritual adviser.

Miss Marsh Ready.

As a result of a conference held by the attorneys for Miss Ruth E. Marsh of Nashua, N. H., who is seeking to break the will of her grandfather, George E. Marsh, from whom murdered on April 2, they probably will oppose the injunction on grounds of undue influence, improper execution or unsound mind. Miss Marsh seeks to share the property equally with the victim's son, James Marsh.

EXPECT STRIKE OF 18,000 AT LOWELL

Sympathetic Walkout Looked for Tomorrow in Seven Cotton Mills.

LOWELL, June 1. A sympathetic strike affecting the seven cotton mills of the city and their 18,000 operatives is looked for Monday. The situation is serious, according to leaders. The whole police force has been ordered on strike duty when the mills open.

The threatened tieup is the result of fifty operatives were struck three weeks ago because they were refused time and a-quarter for working during lunch hour of the Merrimack Manufacturing Company's mills. They claim when the strikers went back April 22 it was with the agreement that they get time-and-a-quarter for all overtime and that the noon hour work should be so classified.

Agent J. C. Waddell claimed the men were paid for the lunch minutes they were out of lunch, and that this was equivalent to time-and-a-quarter. The Greeks refused and have been joined by fully 1,000 operatives.

The mills likely to be affected tomorrow are the Merrimack, the Tremont-Suffolk, Hamilton, Boott, Massachusetts and Appleton. Indignation meetings have been held, and the Central Council of the A. F. of W. will meet tomorrow to ratify the action of the subcommittees, all of which have voted to strike.

Complications are expected, owing to the fact that the strikers plan the so-called "peaceful resistance" method used with success in Belgium. This means that they report at their looms and benches, but refuse to work.

BOOM FOR PELLETIER.

Boston Friends Want Him to Seek Governorship.

District Attorney Joseph H. Pelletier is being presented by his Boston supporters for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Governor Foss, during the week, in talks with legislators and heads of state departments, has opened his batteries for Foss, but will not be a candidate even for further gubernatorial honors.

District Attorney Pelletier will have the support of many Boston leaders, but he is not at odds with each other for years in case he decides to enter the State primaries.

Duchess Takes Her Plea to Queen Mary

LONDON, June 1.—The appearance in London of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, accompanied by his morganatic wife, the Duchess Sophie Von Hohenberg, gives new and graver import to the Duchess' appeal to the Pope for aid in settling her status.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The "Dear Maria" letters of Colonel Roosevelt, that created such interest after Roosevelt, as President, had received Hellis Storer from the post of Minister to Colombia, are revived in the pending campaign by an article by Mrs. Hellis Storer for the current issue of Harper's Weekly.

Mrs. Storer tells how her influence and that of her husband obtained for Colonel Roosevelt the post of Assistant Secretary of the Navy, which opened the way for the National Executive. She says the post has been administered by the colonel's biographers, as he chose to lighten the duties of his colleagues to the Storers after he had removed them from the Austrian embassy, gonna necessarily.

583 TAFT DELEGATES, ASSERTS M'KINLEY

President's Campaign Manager Says Roosevelt Cannot Stampede Convention.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Director Mc Kinley issued a statement today declaring that 583 delegates to the Chicago convention are pledged to President Taft. This is forty-three more than enough to nominate. He further stated that Colonel Roosevelt has 427, or 113 less than enough to nominate. Twenty-two delegates remain to be chosen. Colonel Roosevelt is counting 200 of Mr. Taft's delegates.

"There is no longer any question that the friends of the President will be in a majority in the convention, and will control that body from the election of temporary chairman until adjournment," said Mr. McKinley.

"Mr. Roosevelt and his friends will face a very different situation in the Republican National Convention from any they have this far faced.

"The delegates for the most part are men of calm and mature political judgment who will not be stampeded by noise and bluster.

"Mr. Roosevelt will be accorded a square deal. No rights which any candidate may possess in the premises will be denied, and, on the other hand, no rights which any one candidate may have will be permitted to be perverted by unfair means."

CLARK LEADERS HAIL RHODE ISLAND SWEEP AS IMPORTANT GAIN

Champ Clark leaders and workers throughout New England were jubilant yesterday at the Speaker's victory in Rhode Island in making a clean sweep of the ten delegates elected from that State to the Democratic National convention.

Clark carried every city and town in Rhode Island, and in the whole State his majority was almost four to one over Governor Wilson.

Commenting on the victory last night, George W. Greene, National committeeman-elect to the Baltimore convention, said:

"The vote in Rhode Island was a very emphatic one. We in Rhode Island who have studied the situation felt that this State would go for Clark unmistakably, but few of us realized the vote would be so strong. We are certainly very much pleased with the result of the primary and feel that it was a most successful one.

"Of course, I have my personal opinion, but I hesitate to express them at this time or to say much on the result as I had rather leave the matter in the hands of the delegates, feeling sure that they will give it full expression."

Complete returns from Rhode Island give:

Speaker Clark 5,712.
Governor Harmon 728.
Governor Wilson made a fair showing in only one city of the State, Cranston. Here Clark had a lead of less than two to one.

The fight for national committeeman was the hottest in years. It was won by ex-Mayor Gregne of Woonsocket. He was re-elected, defeating Congressman George P. O'Shaughnessy by 5,324 to 4,991.

Pawtucket was the pivotal city in the fight for national committeemen. Until after midnight the victory was conceded to O'Shaughnessy by a majority of over five hundred, but at 1 o'clock, when Pawtucket was heard from, it was found that Greene had 1,281 votes to O'Shaughnessy's 241.

SENATOR CHILTON OUT FOR CLARK; DECLARES PEOPLE WANT ACTION

WASHINGTON, June 1.—In an editorial in his newspaper the Charlestown Gazette tomorrow, Senator Chilton of West Virginia will declare in favor of Speaker Clark for President. He will say:

"The people now demand concrete promises and honest performances. Champ Clark believes in acting and bases his actions upon Democratic principles. He is now, and has been for years, urging the democracy to act economically and to do the things that will make living cheaper, and will compel government to respond to the popular will.

"Champ Clark comes from the body of the people. Like Lincoln he has seen the house life of the masses, has tasted poverty and has felt the hard knock of misfortune. His public life will be a bond and security that he can hear the whisper of the distressed from California to Washington.

"To stand him aside is to admit that we are in the same deplorable condition as the Republicans, with principles weak, and looking for a man, just a man. The Democratic hosts in this hour of hope should not forget what has brought them safe thus far. They won the victory of 1910 upon principles and with Champ Clark as their leader. No man has stronger Democratic principles.

"In a statement tonight the Clark bureau announces that 476 delegates are now pledged for the Speaker."

First Cuban Engagement!! War Talk Uncovers Romance

MISS MITCHELL TO WED IN FALL IF THERE'S NO WAR.

Tell Betrothal of Miss Mitchell and Lieut. Fegan, Who May Sail Soon.

The call to arms always has its love story. The first romance to come to light in the present Cuban war is that of Miss Adelaide Loring Mitchell, a pupil of Dr. Dudley S. Sargent, at Harvard, and Lieutenant Joseph Charles Fegan, U. S. M. C., who is aboard the battleship Florida awaiting orders to sail for Cuban waters.

The pair had been engaged, but there was no public announcement. Then came the talk of trouble in Cuba, and they decided to tell their friends before the young lieutenant should be ordered to the front.

The wedding is to be this Fall, provided there is no campaigning to keep Lieutenant Fegan away.

The engagement was announced at a dinner party at the Hotel Vendome and is the result of a meeting when both attended a dinner on the Florida some time ago. Miss Mitchell is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Albert Mitchell of Portland, Me., She is living with her sister, Mrs. James Goodwin Johnson. Lieutenant Fegan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Fegan of Dorchester.

WOMAN CONTRACTOR BLOCKS AN AVENUE

Mrs. Kelly Opposes Continuation of a Dorchester Street Until She Gets Damages.

The city is desirous of making Vaughan avenue, which runs off of Geneva avenue, Dorchester, a continuous thoroughfare connecting with Wells place, two blocks distance. The little street is already open at both ends, but Mrs. Margaret Kelly, contractor, has called a halt on the city's operations. Mrs. Kelly owns a yard, a fence and a number of dump carts, all of which stand directly in the way of further civic progress in that particular Dorchester locality.

It may appear easy for a great city to push through a small improvement like the extension of Vaughan avenue, but if any one thinks so it is because he is not acquainted with Mrs. Margaret Kelly.

Margaret Kelly guards Vaughan avenue and dares the whole city to take from her the small bit of property she calls her front yard.

If any one has a doubt as to Mrs. Kelly's attitude in the matter and her ability to protect her own, a visit upon her in her home will dispel all misgivings. A inspector found the contractor coming out of the barn where she had been overseeing the men as they stabled for the night her five teams of horses. There was no mistaking her for the owner of the property and the manager of a thriving business.

"What do they think I am?" she asks. "Just let them try to put their street over my property without giving me damages, and they'll have some fight on their hands. I didn't know anything about it until I saw in the paper that Mrs. Kelly would receive $700 for damages sustained through improvements in Vaughan avenue. What's $700, in comparison to the harm that will come to me?

"It will cost me no less than $24,000 to raise my lot and buildings, and I've already filed a suit against the city."

Neighbors say the Kellys have been in their present locality for twenty-seven years. Mr. Kelly died ten years ago, and since his death his wife has carried on his business and reared her six children.

Landslide Overflows River.

QUEBEC, June 1.—A landslide at St. Luc, Champlain County, has filled the bed of the Champlain River for a distance of 800 yards, causing the water to rise twenty-three feet and overflow the surrounding country. Damage to property was considerable, but so far as known no life was lost.

HALIFAX PRISONER A BOSTON CROOK?

Inspector Hurley Thinks Slayer Is Well-Known Here as a House Breaker.

The Cambridge police are in communication with the police of Halifax, concerning the young man under arrest there for the shooting which resulted in the death of Thomas Donaldson and the fatal wounding of John Cody. The affray took place in Donaldson's grocery store in Rockingham. The youth gave his name as Herbert Grant of Boston, and his age as nineteen. He said he had a brother living in Boston.

Chief Inspector P. J. Hurley of Cambridge said yesterday:

"I am convinced that this is Hubert Grant, alias James H. Grant, formerly of Cambridge, who has a criminal record and operated around Boston and Cambridge in the Summer of 1907. He was arrested by the Boston police at that time and sentenced to a term of from five to seven years. He was also arraigned in Cambridge. He was wanted for breaks in private houses with two accomplices. He is over twenty-five years of age. Several fingers are missing from one of his hands, from an accident he sustained in a boys' reform school."

M'MILLAN GOES NORTH.

Peary's Lieutenant to Make Study of Eskimos.

To make a minute study of the Eskimos and bird life in the frozen North, Donald B. McMillan, Bowdoin College, '08, one of Peary's lieutenants in his successful dash to the North Pole, sailed from Boston yesterday in an especially built power boat for the northern coast of Labrador.

Accompanying Mr. McMillan from Boston was Jonathan C. Small of Provincetown, a boyhood chum of McMillan's and for two years a life-saver at Woods End.

The men started from Driscoll's Landing at the foot of State street early yesterday morning. They expect to stop at Portland for a week at Mr. McMillan's camp. After leaving Portland they will continue to Sidney, where the final stock will be taken aboard the boat. They will then travel through the Straits of Belle Isle to Battle Harbor, where A. Cleveland Bent, the noted ornithologist of Taunton, Mass., will join the party.

DYING AFTER FIGHT NEAR CIRCUS CROWD

One Man Probably Fatally Hurt and Several Others Injured in Street Battle.

One man was probably fatally injured, several others were seriously wounded, and three men were arrested in a fight last night on Greenleaf street, within a stone's throw of a circus crowd of several thousand persons on the old baseball grounds on Huntington avenue.

Within a few minutes after the fighting began, a crowd of more than 500 gathered around the score or more men who were using bottles and sticks in their battle. Several of the combatants were stunned. One, Henry Day, of No. 8 Yarmouth street, was hit over the head with a bottle. He was rushed to City Hospital in a police ambulance. The doctors said he probably would die.

At least one other man was felled with a blow. He was taken off by his comrades unconscious. It was reported to the police that two men had been severely beaten and then kicked.

Sergeant Clifford and Patrolman McCarthy, responding to a call for assistance, dispersed the mob and arrested three men. All were employed by the circus which gave its last performance last night. The men said they were Daniel Smedley, Walter Cox and Charles Lucky. They were held for a hearing tomorrow.

According to bystanders, the fight started over a row between a circus man and an outsider.

ALL DAYTON SILENT AS WRIGHT IS BURIED

Last Services for Man Who Made Aviation an Actuality Held at His Home.

DAYTON, O., June 1.—Wilbur Wright, the first man who ever flew, peer of the men who invented the steam engine, the steamship and the telegraph, was buried here this afternoon in a modest cemetery on the outskirts of the city.

The city of Dayton as a mark of respect to the memory of its distinguished son suspended business during the hours of the funeral. A proclamation issued by Mayor Phillips called upon all Dayton citizens to pay this tribute to the late inventor and aviator.

The funeral cortege was the most imposing the community has ever seen. From the modest home in Hawthorne street the coffin was followed by the aged father, Bishop Wright, Miss Catherine Wright, the devoted sister; Orville Wright, his distinguished fraternal co-operators, and the other brothers, Lorin and Reuchlin, with their families.

Many Beautiful Flowers.

The most grief-stricken member of the family, according to visible tokens, was little eight-year-old Horace, the fatherless nephew, who is a son of Lorin. There was also in the large following a great proportion of the most distinguished citizens of Dayton, representatives of the city and State government, representatives of the United States Army and a delegation from the Aeronautical Society of New York, consisting of William J. Hammer and Marcus Mead.

Amid the floral tokens of condolence were beautiful wreaths from the Aeronautical Society of New York, the Aero Club of America, the Aero Club of Illinois, and other aeronautical societies, as well as many scientific and patriotic organizations. The grief manifested from all parts of the country was so great that it was deemed wise for a while to lay the body in state.

The passing of Wilbur Wright brings to a close the life of one of the most remarkable men of the present century. The son of a poor clergyman, living in the Middle West, so modest and shy that publicity was almost an agony to him, he rose to be one of the world's great men and yet never lost his remarkable simplicity of character.

Progress on Inventions.

Wright was the real stimulus of the invention which has made the name famous. As a boy he suffered with heart disease. Having a natural mechanical bent his mind was absorbed by a toy flying machine his father brought home. After running a small country newspaper for a time, young Wright took up the repairing of bicycles in the heyday of the craze. This gave him and his younger brother, Orville, the facilities they required for their work on the aeroplane.

The first motor flight ever made on earth was achieved at Kitty Hawk in December, 1903. Progress then followed fast. The desperate struggle of the two inventors is familiar history. The loyal aid of the sister in their time of need with all her sympathies at one of the things that read like a copy book story.

By hard work, by careful, honest effort, they got backing from capitalists R. Flint, and went to France to sell their product. Their flying in France and terrific flying at Washington simultaneously blazed on the world with the marvels of their invention. They immediately were hailed as the most remarkable of modern inventors. Their success was rapid from this time. The world came to pay homage at their feet. Kings came to see Wilbur at Pau and Le Mans, but it did not cause him to swerve one iota from his poise as a simple, home-spun American.

MOST HARVARD MEN TURN TO BUSINESS

"After college—what?"

That's the question that is being asked all over the country by thousands of seniors in cap and gown, and more anxiously perhaps by an equal number of fond daddies, who have been putting up for son's education during the last four years.

The Harvard Crimson, the college daily paper, has just compiled a list showing "After Harvard—What?" which tells approximately the lines that have been followed by the 20,000 living graduates.

Business leads with a total of 3,939 in the list, which in turn, gets the verdict over medicine. Teaching comes fourth, then engineering, the ministry, government, journalism, and last of all, farming.

The exact figures are: Business, 5,771; law, 5,372; medicine, 4,120; teaching, 3,594; engineering, 1,289; ministry, 1,033; government, 813; journalism, 713; farming, 744.

Of the 815 men classed under the head of government, 412 have entered the civil service, 189 are members of the judiciary, 158 hold military posts, 11 bill legislative officers, and the remaining 95 are scattered from Paris to Pekin in the diplomatic service.

An interesting comparison is afforded by similar statistics recently compiled at Princeton, which shows business leading the law in a proportion of nearly 3 to 1, while engineering is third, medicine fourth, ministry fifth and teaching sixth. Thus proportionately, Harvard produces more lawyers, doctors and teachers, but fewer engineers, ministers and business men. The proportion in journalism, farming, and in the government service is about the same between the two colleges.

Decision on Empty Cars.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today held that empty privately owned cars remaining on privately owned tracks and not "placed for loading" are not subject to demurrage charges.

Miss Cox of Port Arthur, Jamaica, Wins the Individual Trophy.

Lasell Seminary's girl soldiers, a whole battalion of them in natty uniforms and with campaign hats tilted at smart angles, above rolled blonde and brunette tresses, held their annual exhibition drill on the campus in Auburndale before a large and demonstrative gallery of spectators yesterday afternoon.

They handled their rifles in the manual of arms with deftness. Alignment and evidence in their evolutions were commendable.

C Company captured first prize—the coveted flag upon which will be inscribed the names of the proud captain, Miss Annie F. Merrill of Enosburg, Vt., and those of the other officers, who shared in developing the perfection that won against the clever A and B Companies.

Miss Eunice G. Fox of Port Arthur, Jamaica, won the first individual judges' prize, drill from a field of eighty-seconds and Miss Charlotte Charles of Amsterdam, N. Y., got second honors.

First Lieutenant Marion S. McArthur of Albany, N. Y., won the first individual junior prize, from a score or more of rivals. The admiring mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters and sweethearts came from all points of the compass.

It was a scene martial and picturesque. The weather was perfect and the sward like velvet. There was plenty of rivalry and exuberance—likewise a brass band and flags.

Each company had its contingent of cousins. Cadet Major Miriam A. Flynn of Millis was in command. The judges were First Lieutenant Daniel C. Smith and Lieutenant Julian L. Chamberlain of the Eighth Infantry, M. N. M. The exhibition was a tribute to the work of military instructor, Captain Charles A. Ranlett, eighth Infantry, M. V. M.

TWO HURT; HORSE KILLED IN RUNAWAY

Mr. and Mrs. Neil K. Colwell of Somerville were thrown from a wagon seat over a fence and were painfully bruised, and their horse was killed, in a runaway accident on Prescott street hill, Somerville, yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Colwell drives a delivery wagon for his employer, a plumber. He lives on the upper part of Prescott street hill at No. 42H on that street. He drove from his home with Mrs. Colwell down Prescott street. The bridle broke. The weight of a load of heavy iron pipe sent the wagon against the horse's haunches. The horse bolted down Prescott street, which ends on Summer street.

The runaway dashed across Summer street car tracks and plunged into the picket fence at the yard of John Walsh at No. 87 Summer street. The horse crashed through the fence and fell with a broken neck.

The shock of the wagon wheels against the curb sent Mr. and Mrs. Colwell from the wagon seat over the fence to the grass beyond. Mr. Colwell received a deep cut on the forehead. Mr. and Mrs. Colwell were treated at a nearby physician's office and were sent home.

70TH S. S. ANNIVERSARY.

The Sunday School of the First Universalist Church of Somerville will celebrate its seventieth anniversary this morning. Rev. Chester Arthur Drummond will pay a tribute to Miss Elizabeth Page Whittredge, founder of the school. Rev. William Irvin Lawrence will speak on "The Sunday School in the World Today."

NEW YORK, June 1. The strike of the waiters and cooks continued to spread today and ten more restaurants and hotels were added at the close of the day to the list of those already invaded by the Hotel Workers' Union. These included Delmonico's restaurant, where the entire dining room and kitchen forces, numbering 145, exclusive of the boss waiters and head chefs, walked out at 6.30 p. m., after several hours futile negotiations. For the first time since the famous house's establishment nearly a century ago, it was completely out of business.

The other places affected tonight were Breton Hall, the Knickerbocker Hotel at 20th street and Broadway, Lorber's restaurant on Broadway near 40th street, the Fifth Avenue Restaurant, Colard's Restaurant, 37 West 24th street, the Savoy, Ansonia, the Hotel LaFayette and the Netherland.

At the Hotel Netherland the waiters went on strike in the middle of the dinner, leaving the dining rooms filled with guests half served. A policeman, who arrested the leader of the striking waiters, was attacked by a crowd of two strikers and beaten. The prisoner escaped.

The total number of men now on strike is not known. Those were no signs of disorder at any of the hotels or restaurants ordered out tonight. At the Taverne Louis, in the Knickerbocker Building, the situation was met by several manicure girls as waiters.

According to F. A. Read, proprietor of the Park Avenue Hotel, and president of the Hotel Men's Association, the Waiters' Union will never be recognized and no waiters now employed by the strike call will be taken back.

President Read also declared that the places of the strikers will be filled with Japanese, many of whom have made permanent arrangements can be made.

He said that there are now in the city sixteen hundred trained negro waiters from the Winter resort hotels of the South, whose season has ended, and that they are being placed in the hotels as rapidly as possible.

The Breslin has filled the strikers' places with college men. Some other hotels are giving employment to every college man applying. Mr. Read denied the report that his association had taken under advisement a proposal for an arbitration formulated by the strike leaders. Neither did he know anything about the report that the State Labor Board had offered to act as mediator.

Many of the big hotels today sent out circulars announcing a uniform increase of about $10 per month in wages of waiters. Among them are the Waldorf, Astor, Plaza, Vanderbilt, Manhattan, Imperial and Park Avenue.

HALT COMMON WORK.

City Councilmen Question Necessity of $50,000 for Resoiling.

The work of resoiling Boston Common will be stopped in a short time unless the City Council takes immediate appropriation from the Parkman Fund. To complete the work at least $50,000 more is necessary and only $15,000 available is but $25,000. Superintendent Sullivan of the Public Grounds Department today applied for the additional appropriation. Some of the members of the City Council under the work is largely an experiment and favor spending the money from the Parkman Fund on the smaller parks.

The Mosquito Should Be as Rare in New England as the Crocodile or the Alligator—It Is the Duty of Boards of Health to Make Him So.

The pretty little town of Winthrop, nestling down by the sea, is about to wage war to the death, to utter extermination, it is promised, against the mosquito, the worst pest of New England in Summer.

Progressive Brookline has already wiped the torment of itch and poisons utterly from its list of nuisances. No mosquitoes exist there since the governing body of the town took the proper sanitary measures to make the very atmosphere of Brookline fatal to the abominables.

There should be no mosquito in New England. He should be as much a stranger to these States as the alligator or the crocodile. He can be made so, if the local boards of health all over New England, and particularly in our coast line towns and villages, take even half a leaf out of the book of Col. Goethals and his energetic brother officers down at Panama, where their intelligent and unrelenting work has banished the mosquito so thoroughly that visitors coming back north are loud in their praise for what has been accomplished in that horrid climate against this poison-breeding insect.

Surely, what has been done by Col. Goethals and his men on the Canal Zone can be accomplished here in much healthier New England. It can be, if there is a cooperative spirit among our local health boards and a disposition to do everywhere what has already been done in Brookline and what the Selectmen of Winthrop are setting out to do.

But even boards of health cannot do everything. Every good citizen, man, woman or child, should be a volunteer board of health. Stagnant pools, old tomato cans half filled with rainwater, barrels or pails, left standing near barns or stables, these are the lures of the mosquito. Make war on them and the mosquito will quickly vanish from our latitude.

THAT YOUNG 'FITZ' BUSY LIKE HIS DAD

First He Pitches a Winning Game, Then Covers First Like a Veteran.

Here's Young Fitz—John F. Jr., the thirteen-year-old son of THE Fitz—pitching major league ball all last season and the first of this and yesterday practically winning a game by his heavy hitting, as well as covering the first sack in classy style.

Looks just like his dad, too, in smaller model, of course.

Last season Fitzy, Jr., pitched for the Samosets, a Dorchester "kid" team. He was a raving wonder and the Samosets won mostly. This season Young J. F. broke into faster company. He was signed on by his eldest brother, Thomas F. Fitzgerald, to pitch for the strong Crawford nine of Roxbury, which plays at the Overlook in Franklin Park and is "some baseball" team, take it from us.

He Struck Out Eight.

In the St. Vincent game at South Boston, Young Fitzy struck out eight of the South Boston sluggers. A week ago he pitched a winning game for the Crawfords against the strong Minute Boy, Jr., team of Lexington. He found nine of the Minute boys like breaking sticks.

Yesterday the Crawfords played the St. Mary Allar Boys team of Malden, and J. F., Jr., was put on first base, while another pitcher was given a chance. He covered the position cleverly, and his stick work was great. Out of three times at bat, he connected with two singles and a three-bagger. The Crawfords won, 4 to 2.

Next Saturday the Crawfords play the St. Mary Allar Boys of West Quincy. Young Fitzy is slated to pitch and expects to have the contest of his life.

He Has One Ambition.

The present "ambition" of Mr. F. Jr., is to pitch a "no hit, no run" game. Of his box work he says:

"I am always in fit shape to go in and pitch for my team, and if we don't win it is no fault of mine. I twirl for all that is in me, and have no trouble in beating the plate. I believe after seeing the batter once at the plate that I have his measure, as the big leaguers say, and play for his weak points.

"I have been pretty successful so far this season, but will not be satisfied until I see my name in the 'no hit, no run' column. I want to perfect my pitching arm so when I enter Dorchester High school I will be of some use to the team.

ECZEMA ON LIMB ITCHED DREADFULLY

Scratched in Sleep, Spread Rapidly, Cuticura Soap and Ointment Worked Wonders. Stopped Itching and In Less Than a Week Healed Entirely. Cost 75 Cents.

27 Whitney Ave., Cambridge, Mass.—"My trouble was eczema. It began by my bosom supporter rubbing and poisoning the skin on my leg just above the knee. The eruption was small pimples which itched terribly. When I scratched them they would scab over and they spread so nights that I scratched the scabs off in my sleep. They spread rapidly. I used witch hazel, different cancholic salves but nothing did it any good until a neighbor told me how her hands were cracked open and bleeding and that Cuticura cured her. I had been to a number of doctors before buying remedies that did no good that I sent for samples of Cuticura Soap and Ointment before using. They worked wonders. They stopped the itching when heated from the bed and by the time a week was gone I had healed entirely, after using a full-sized box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Cuticura Soap, costing but 75c." (Signed) Mrs. W. E. Lewis, Nov. 25, 1911.

I was bothered two years with that plague. Everything that anyone would recommend to me all failed. Today I am well and owe it all to the Cuticura Remedies." (Signed) T. M. Hays, Sept. 20, 1911.

That of Miss Hannah W. Cobb and W. A. Lawrence Conspicuous in the List.

FEAR BOSTON AS RIVAL.

Quebec Business Men See Grand Trunk Advantages.

QUEBEC, June 1.—The Board of Trade will call a special meeting to consider a report by A. F. Scott regarding the possibility that trade will be diverted from Canadian ports to Boston. Mr. Scott said that it had come to his knowledge that the Grand Trunk Railway had often had running rights over the Tamiskaming & Northern Quebec Railway from Cochrane, Ont., to North Bay. From North Bay the Grand Trunk controls a line to White River Junction, Vt. This, Mr. Scott said, would give Boston an opportunity to receive the entire traffic from the West over the Grand Trunk Pacific, which is expected by Canada.

"WILD MEN OF BORNEO," WAINO AND PLUTANO, AS THEY LOOKED IN RETIREMENT

"The Wild Men of Borneo" Are Dead. So Is Tom Thumb, but Siamese Twins Aren't

What becomes of the freaks?

Wrong. We mean the side-show freaks, the human monstrosities.

The death in Waltham of "Plutano," the last of the two "Wild Men of Borneo" (Ohio) raises the query—what does become of the freaks, anyhow? Where is the Cardiff Giant? What has become of Jo-Jo the Dog-faced Boy? Has anybody here seen the Missing Link?

The whereabouts of some of the side-show and museum wonders is known in Boston.

The fact that the "Wild Men of Borneo" lived in Waltham, that their names were "Waino" and "Plutano" and that "Waino" died five years ago and "Plutano" last Friday, was familiar to many Bostonians.

Cardiff Giant in Hock.

The Cardiff Giant was last reported as being "in hock" for his room rent somewhere in the northern part of Worcester county. A woman who has stored that monolithic fraud for several years went to court to recover for the storage she said was due her from the owner.

Jumbo, the biggest elephant ever in captivity, was died a hero trying to save a baby elephant from a railroad engine, reposes (stuffed), in the Natural History collection of Tufts College out at Medford Hillside.

But many Bostonians will be surprised to learn that Colonel Frank P. Stone of this city, who has been "next friend" to all the other unfortunate freaks, declares that "Gumbo" is also at Tufts.

Notice it is "Gumbo," with a "G," not with a "J."

"Gumbo," said Colonel Stone yesterday afternoon in his office over Austin & Stone's Museum, "was the biggest organ-outang in the world. She was owned by the King of Portugal. I leased her for a year for $2,000 and she died—died the very day the contract expired together, so he and the contract expired together, so to speak. The King of Portugal had no use for a dead thing, so I had Gumbo stuffed and gave her to Tufts College."

An Authority on Freaks.

If you want the business address, present occupation, past performance or future prospect of any freak, human, near-human or inhuman, Colonel Stone will oblige. Freaks are his long suit. He has been the "producer," so to speak, of one freak after another.

Jo-Jo, the Dog-faced Boy, is back in that other cold climate. It seems Jo-Jo—or Joseph-Joseph to be formal—is one of the hairy Russians. He made his debut in Ancient Burmese. He made his debut in Ancient Burmese. He made his debut in Ancient Burmese

REACH AGREEMENT IN UTILITIES FIGHT

Foss and Legislature Arrive at Settlement Assuring Railroad Bills' Passage.

The controversy between Governor Foss and the Legislature over the Railroad Commission is practically settled. It is not known for one million dollars raises the question whether this mine is the one the late Daniel E. Owen of No 40 Kenwood street Dorchester, was seeking when he and "Scotty" and others in "Scotty's" party were entombed in the Spring of 1906.

It has always been a question among both enterprising capitalists and western miners whether "Scotty" had a mine at all. May be he made the row reported from Los Angeles will be one of the mystery.

There never was any doubt about "Scotty's" money, when he had it. Who, "Scotty" was in wealth he was in up to the limit so to speak.

The mystery always remained, however as to where he got it.

Scotty said he had a gold mine out in Death Valley. Death Valley is a desolate, trackless waste beginning at a point 85 miles northwest of Los Angeles and extending over California State line into Nevada.

Favorite $100 Bill.

A hundred-dollar bill is "Scotty's" favorite piece of money. He calls it a "hundred dollar," possibly because it is a handy medium of procuring that state of exhilaration sometimes described as a "jag."

Nobody knew just how much "Scotty" had money. He never was one to brag gold in any form out of the valley either dust, ore or nugget. He was not known to have actually sold any mining stock or to have a bank account. He merely appeared in Los Angeles every so often with nothing but bills in his pockets.

"Scotty" is a prince of spenders. He is said to have had his share of fun with his money in the days when he was "hitting it rich." The Santa Fe Railroad $5,000 for a special train to take him, his friends and "Scotty" in the record time of 44 hours and fifty-five minutes. Only nine minutes elapsed time for stops.

The newspaper man on the train was Van Loan, then sporting editor of the Los Angeles Examiner and now a magazine writer of note. Van Loan wrote vivid descriptions of the harrowing heat across the Western half of the continent made lively reading.

Expected in Boston.

"Scotty" kept on to New York that time and was expected in Boston. But he did not get as far East as this city. He returned to Florida.

In the following Spring of 1906, Daniel E. Owen of Dorchester and a party of other Eastern mining experts and investors were visiting at Death Valley as guests of "Scotty" and met Mr. Owen on the day of his death amid a tragedy.

A year before that another party with "Scotty" had been "grubstaked" and with "Scotty" to see his Death Valley property. After the misfortune to Owen party, investors were not willing to be guided by the Death Valley to make the mysterious mine.

The fact that Warner Scott, brother of Walter, was painfully wounded in this holdup of the Owen party seemed to suppress "Scotty's" indignant denials that he had any part in the alleged "framing."

Enemies of "Scotty" intimated the Death Valley spender obtained his coin by underhand means. After the Owen "grubstake" warrants were asked for "Scotty" and his guide, but it all ended in failure.

Now dispatches from Los Angeles give the whole story. "Scotty" will be able to tell the world how he found the mine on the rim of Death Valley, for $1,000,000. The sale agreement to this effect took place this week, with a first payment of $15,000. A second payment of $25,000 was to be made yesterday. The other payments are to be made at the rate of $5,000 a month till the million is acquired.

"Scotty" said the purchasers are A. E. Watson, F. E. Sharp and F. [illegible]. They confirm the sale, but would not give the exact location of the mine.

"What are you going to do with this million dollars, Scotty?" he was asked.

"Oh, I'm going to give half to my wife, build a $5,000 house for her, then get busy again in the Valley," replied the Man of Mystery.

How He Found Mine.

"Scotty's" name is Walter Scott. He is thirty-nine years old. He was born in Hamilton, Ontario, and at sixteen years passed on a ranch. He became noted for his daring in the saddle and his skill with a revolver and rifle. He always had a clean stomach revolver.

For a few years "Scotty" traveled with Buffalo Bill's "Wild West," doing stunts with a rifle.

About fifteen years ago, when "Scotty" was twenty-four years old, he was "rock prospecting" again in California and Nevada. One day, while skirting the rim of Death Valley, he discovered, as he rode in search of a gold mine of marvelous richness.

"Scotty" gave out the tale that he believed his find to be the famed Peg Leg mine, the original discovery of which sent insane at the richness of their treasure.

The country then heard of "Scotty" with a vengeance. His extravagances, his tips—$100 to bootblacks and so forth—are said partly to be "liquor," his scorn of chance money and "soft mah's drink," his urge for speed, his visits to his gold mine and his persistent refusal to specify its location all these were written up for columns.

In the early part of 1905 "Scotty" had been talking about taking a special train to Chicago to the New York game time, just to see how fast a real man owner can drive, when a puts the spurs into the railroad engine.

Van Loan called Scott, who was at Barstow, near Death Valley, this talk of a special train. Scott's answer was characteristic. "Scotty" is going to Chicago," was the reply. "Death Valley Scott is on the California edge of Death Valley."

Scotty learned he would get a special train to Chicago. He visited John J. Byrne, superintendent of the Santa Fe, who "framed" "Scotty" into the Death Valley Scott from Chicago within three days' notice. Byrne was a friend of "Scotty" from Barstow.

"Scotty" then put up and the $5,000 Arrangements were made. At Dearborn Sunday afternoon July 9 1905, the famous "Scotty Special," as "Scotty" named his $5,000 speed killer, rolled out of Los Angeles and he died for the Atlantic border.

"Scotty" reached the train at the last moment, leading a yellow cur. He had gained for a friend to procure him a dog. "Scotty" is fond of [illegible]. The dog was to [illegible].

Picturesque Doings on Wealth From Death Valley, Sold Now for Million.

The news from Los Angeles that Walter Scott, better known as "Scotty of Death Valley," has sold his famous mystery gold mine for one million dollars raises the question whether this mine is the one the late Daniel E. Owen of No 40 Kenwood street Dorchester, was seeking when he and "Scotty" and others in "Scotty's" party were entombed in the Spring of 1906.

It has always been a question among both enterprising capitalists and western miners whether "Scotty" had a mine at all. May be he made the row reported from Los Angeles will be one of the mystery.

There never was any doubt about "Scotty's" money, when he had it. Who, "Scotty" was in wealth he was in up to the limit so to speak.

The mystery always remained, however as to where he got it.

Scotty said he had a gold mine out in Death Valley. Death Valley is a desolate, trackless waste beginning at a point 85 miles northwest of Los Angeles and extending over California State line into Nevada.

Favorite $100 Bill.

A hundred-dollar bill is "Scotty's" favorite piece of money. He calls it a "hundred dollar," possibly because it is a handy medium of procuring that state of exhilaration sometimes described as a "jag."

A System That Weeds Out Lots That Are Not Bargains

HERE'S one way of "weeding out." Every time a buyer looks over a lot proposed for the Tunnel Bargain Basement, he is influenced by the fact that he will have to face the Automatic Price Reductions should the lot fail to sell quickly, so that UNLESS THE LOT IN QUESTION CAN BE SOLD AT A BARGAIN PRICE IT IS NOT ACCEPTABLE.

BUT we're not infallible, and sometimes a lot does not sell as quickly as we thought it would. Then comes another weeding out—for the Automatic Price Reduction system makes prices lower and lower, week by week, until the lot does sell, and any lot that is not extraordinary must become a bargain.

ROOSEVELT MAY NOT FIGHT ROOT AT CONVENTION

Colonel Inclined to Be Peaceable and Not to Oppose Wavering Delegates.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., June 1.—The threatened fight of the Roosevelt forces against the selection of Senator Elihu Root as temporary chairman of the Chicago convention is likely to be abandoned.

This unexpected turn was indicated by a dictated statement by Colonel Roosevelt after he had conferred with a part of the Roosevelt delegation from Illinois and Maine here today. The Colonel's change of front is believed to be inspired by an effort on the part of his managers to establish more workable relations with wavering delegates. Intimation has come to the ex-President, so it is said, that a considerable number of delegates elected as Taft men are willing to flop over, but that they dislike making any open fight in the Taft plan for organizing the convention.

While these delegates were eager enough to swing the Roosevelt lineup on the ballot for the presidency, they do not want to plunge into the fray on the chairmanship. As a move of expediency, the Roosevelt leaders believe that it is practical politics to drop the Root fight and avoid the clash until it comes to the vote on a nomination, in explaining his stand respecting the temporary chairmanship, the ex-President indicated that his preference for temporary chairman had been Governor Hadley of Missouri; but he further showed that it is not an unalterable decision. In his statement Colonel Roosevelt says:

Colonel Roosevelt's Statement.

"I have written to Governor Hadley concerning the temporary chairmanship, but nothing definite has been decided. The Illinois and Maine delegations do not think it essential for us to have the temporary chairmanship. I want to hear from the other delegations before committing myself.

"The delegates consider the matter of temporary chairmanship absolutely unimportant. Whatever the temporary chairman might say would represent his own opinion and that of the National Com-

Mrs. Geraghty Only Making Shirtwaist

Former Miss French in "Honeysuckle Cottage," Is Not Sewing Baby Clothes.

NEWPORT, June 1. "Young Mrs Jack Geraghty," who was Julia Steele French, and her husband, are deeply annoyed by the publication of a false report about a most delicate subject. It is understood, too, that Mrs. Geraghty's grandmother, Mrs. Amos Tuck French, and her aunt, Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, are greatly vexed by the further announcement that the stork may observe as a message of family peace and reconciliation.

The report was circulated Thursday night that Mrs. Geraghty was "making baby clothes in the honeysuckle cottage on Everett street."

It was learned easily, that she was not sewing on baby clothes but on a shirtwaist for herself. She eloped with Geraghty, a chauffeur, a little more than a year ago, and her wealthy and fashionable relatives refused to receive her again. So her purse being rather slender she is making her own clothes.

UNCLE SAM RUNS A BAKERY.

Soldiers Turn Out 20,000 Loaves Daily at San Antonio.

EL PASO, Texas, June 1.—No feature of the United States maneuvre camp at San Antonio has attracted more attention than the division bakery. The bakery turned out 20,000 two-pound loaves daily.

This was the first time that the bakery was called on to feed a division of regulars, and performed the task without hair trying. Captain L. R. Holbrook, of the Fifth Cavalry, and Commissary Sergeant "Pat" Duane invented the bakery and patented it, and then let the War Department have the use of it for nothing.

'ORDERS,' SAYS NEW CALIFORNIAN CAPTAIN

The substitution of Captain William Marsters for Captain Stanley M. Lord on the Leyland liner California now in this port, is the subject of much comment and inquiry. It was Captain Lord who was in command of the Californian when that vessel failed to respond to the "S. O. S." signals from the sinking White Star liner Titanic. The fact of this failure was first reported in the AMERICAN.

Captain Marsters, formerly of the Cuban, was asked: "Has Captain Lord been dismissed from the service?"

"I was ordered aboard this ship from the Cuban, he replied, "and I obeyed orders, asking any questions. I have no knowledge direct or indirect, whether Captain Lord's transfer is temporary or permanent. I suppose he was needed at the inquiry into the Titanic disaster that has been made in England."

J. C. Evans, the Californian's wireless operator at the time of the Titanic disaster, is replaced on the Californian by A. L. Hancock of the Cestrian. He said Evans was testifying at the inquiry. Hancock was ordered to the Californian two hours before she sailed.

AMERICANS FLEEING IN MEXICO REVOLT

EL PASO, Tex., June 1. Mexican rebels of Juarez declare they have taken Torreon and have cut off the last of supplies for General Huerta's troops now facing Rebel forces against Chihuahua. The federals have had no direct communication with Torreon for several days, the rebels say.

A rebel expedition of 3,000 men has been sent against a Mexican port, but which port it is has not been stated. An effort will be made to smuggle ammunition through this port.

Americans and other foreign residents are leaving the city of Chihuahua and the rebel zone in northern Mexico as rapidly as train service will permit.

BOSTON'S OPPORTUNITY TO BE A GREAT WORLD PORT POINTED OUT BY BUSH, NOTED EXPERT

In their efforts to secure for Boston a solution of the deep-water docks problem, the directors of the port are studying all that has been done elsewhere under similar conditions. And out of the experience they are thus obtaining they are framing a work out the future salvation of Boston harbor as a place to which may be brought and properly handled, at least a share of the world's transoceanic trade.

As one of the investigations the port directors have for some time been considering the possibility of bringing about on the land owned by the Commonwealth at South Boston a popularly called "the Commonwealth docks," a terminal development similar to the Bush terminal in New York. The Bush terminal is generally recognized as the most intelligent and comprehensive waterfront development to be found in the United States, if not in the world. It has been created in less than twenty years in a comparatively isolated tract of about 240 acres in South Brooklyn.

The shipping of the Bush Terminal has reached such a volume that if there was no other shipping at New York it would still be one of the great ports in the world. There are seven large piers and on two of them there is handled each year a greater tonnage than the entire foreign tonnage of the port of Boston. Back of the piers are extensive wharves, and back of them a great group of industrial buildings in which there are varied industries employing 9,000 workers, or as many as are employed in a good-sized industrial city.

The piers, warehouses and loft buildings are all connected by railroad tracks, but this terminal railway has no direct connection with any of the railroads entering New York except the Long Island Railroad a connection which is of practically no importance. Connection from this terminal railroad to all other railroads entering New York is made by car floats.

"LADY BETTY" CHAPMAN'S AMAZING TRIUMPH IN QUEST OF LOVE

Mrs. Chapman-Pierce-Henderson Finds a "Real Man" for a Husband.

BY CLEMENT L. POLLOCK.

LADY BETTY'S quest for love is over. Half of her young life she has sought it, like one follows the alluring yet elusive moth; like one pursues the flickering, fleeting, fictitious light on the marsh land; like one runs eagerly toward the end of the glittering rainbow's arc for the fabled pot of gold.

Love an ignis-fatuus, a delusion? No, for Lady Betty Faulkner-Chapman-Pierce-Henderson, Boston's famous beauty, has found her heart's desire in a stalwart oil king and she and her lord are sailing over the blue waters of the Atlantic in one of the bridal suites of the Lusitania

It is a love story that fits the warm Springtime when the mating cry of the bird is heard. It is a tale that will cheer the Winter's fireside

I.

He lavished on the winsome girl
Love-kisses and confetti;
He wooed with spirit all a-whirl
And—captured Lady Betty!

Irvin Chapman sauntered along Beacon street with his hands in his pockets. He was thinking, and his club friends would have been surprised if they had caught him in the act. For he it known Irvin hadn't had to do much thinking. That had been done for him largely by ancestors that had accumulated blue blood and much untainted wealth.

A well-defined frown gathered on his face, elusive, because a stranger there. His hands delved deeper into his pockets. Following the instinctive trend of his feet unconsciously he found himself at his club, inside, in an easy chair, in front of a table and a tall glass with an amber liquid in it, waiting attack. Then as he blew soft blue wreaths of smoke over his head he got down to brass tacks.

Irvin was in love with the most bewitching, fascinating, beautiful girl in Boston—the first real experience where affection stood the light of noonday. He was twenty-five. He was of the old stock—the kind that humanized the Brahmans from Copley square. His grandfather, Jonathan Chapman, had been Mayor of Boston before a Bunker Hill Commission was ever born.

And So They Were Married.

He mingled with mutual enjoyment with the Gordon Dexters and the Dalrymples and others of Beacon street who watched their front doors carefully. And yet he was in love and he had stepped out of the Back Bay environment to find the girl.

The fact was that young Chapman had found her in Dorchester. Her name was Bessie Faulkner. She was in his mind as he puffed his cigar, as he was loved his drink. Beautiful Bessie Faulkner!

"I love her and she loves me," ruminated Chapman. What a tale tale of having money and breed and influence if you can't have what you want, besides." I am going out to see Bessie."

And so they were married—Thomas Irvin Chapman and Bessie Faulkner, in Boston, January 4, 1905. She was a high school girl of seventeen. There was talk in the Back Bay and talk in Dorchester. But they were happy in their Columbus avenue apartment, living on love, kisses and what they could spear from the bills of fare in the restaurants kept by.

This lasted four short months. Then Irvin kept her waiting for him in the evenings—restless kept her waiting all night. She went home to her mother. They never lived a day with her. The Summer passed and no Walter was for it. It was May, and with the flowers came a little son. He was promptly and properly named Thomas Irvin Chapman, Jr.

But the baby did not cement the breek between husband and wife. He kept away. Sometimes he sent money and sometimes he forgot it. The young wife cried, ashamed.

"I wish you'd speak to Irvin," the deserted bride said one day to her father, Robert J. Faulkner.

So the father kept a lookout for Him Faulkner met the negligent young man.

"See here," said the indignant father-in-law, "why don't you support your wife properly?"

"We don't worry; everything'll be all right," replied the young husband.

"You'd better let your mother all about things," said Faulkner.

Bessie's mother, Mrs. Chapman on Washington street, could not offer him. She sought and found a way to what was wrong.

"Irvin, I heard the other night how you and Bessie are getting along. You are not living together."

"Well," said Irvin, "I don't want a shrew-faced mother's ill luck now. Everything'll be all right when she gets well."

Beginning of the End

It was in the Summer of 1908 when she could stand the neglect no longer and she wrote him on behalf of after she MUST see him. This was his reply.

Bessie,

Boston June 10 1908

I can not send you any more money. I will meet you at the Plaza at 12 o'clock noon, but you must tell me why you want it, and what you are going to do with it. And if it is all about a divorce I will not see you. I want to see you only as your husband.

IRVIN CHAPMAN

That was the beginning of the end. Chapman went to the other side of the world. He was in Australia. He was in Japan. The young wife with her and-soon child—it became the focus of Hyman Hop's social employment. She found it. She posed for noted artists. Louis Kronberg, the noted Boston artist, painted her, full length. She sat for Gibson, Christy and others gifted with pen and pencil.

The beauty of the girl made her famous. It was natural that the stage lured her. The girl worked for herself and Baby Chapman. But in spite the child died.

It was in the Spring of 1909 that the young wife, more beautiful than ten years before when she married, stood in the Boston divorce court and asked that the bonds that bound her to Chapman be severed. Chapman did not appear.

"I have always wanted to live with my husband and have longed only to live with me," testified Mrs. Chapman. "Then baby died and I did not care to live with him. When baby died I took the fullest expression."

"Where is Chapman?" was asked.

"Mr. Chapman is in Japan," replied his attorney. "He has been teaching school there. Since the war broke out I have been informed that his business has been poor."

II.

Fame came to her on flitting wing,
Fairest of Boston daughters;
And then she dreamed that Pierce could bring
Sweet peace to troubled waters!

Lady Betty quickly achieved fame on the stage. She had the beauty that catches, that holds. She was not long without an engagement. She played in the artistic Belasco productions. At one time she understudied Henrietta Crossman in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." All the big cities of the country saw and admired her.

Then she went abroad. London and Paris were thrilled with her fascinations. Titles and, what is more, real money were laid at her feet. One of her devoted admirers was James Ormonde de Rothschild, heir of Baron Maurice de Rothschild.

It looked for a time as though Lady Betty would become Baroness Betty!

Then Rex Pierce appeared on the scene. He was a nice, young, likable American boy—very agreeable. He was also the son of Henry Clay Pierce, one of the big Standard Oil men. That, of course, did not detract from the young man's favorable qualities.

Had 10,000 Love Letters.

It was said that when she came to New York shortly after this she had 10,000 love letters that had been written to her in her trunks.

It was on November 14, 1910, that a very charming young woman and a smart looking young man appeared at City Hall, New York, procured a license and began to look about them.

They sung about the front steps of the marble building beautifully until they spied the amiable face of a newspaper man, and how the young man ventured:

"Can one get married about here, my man?"

"Hardly," replied the young man "but two might."

Ah, just so," said

A silvery stream of laughter fell from the lips of the girl. The reporter looked up and took notice.

"Are you the candidates for the halter—I mean the altar?" inquired the reporter.

"Yes," replied the girl. Her voice was sweet and musical. She also had an air about her that made the reporter think of of the nice of the office. He piloted them to Alderman James J. Smith.

Alexis Perry of [illegible] and Roy a Lunch of Cam [illegible] ...ental Tea reporter wandered ... city Hall with a fatherly ... thing in his mind. He finally tackled a piece of politics and forgot the luncheon—thus losing a beat that would have got him a promise of a raise in salary.

For it was well be confessed here that the young woman in question was our heroine, Lady Betty, cheating and getting married thoughtlessly. The thoughtful man was Rex Pierce, who was laying up a lot of trouble for himself and his wealthy father.

Lady Betty went home, and so did Pierce. He lived with his father at No. 10 East Fifty-seventh street, New York.

It has been [illegible] few furies or more the ... [illegible] keep a secret. ... [illegible] that secret four ... [illegible] month it might have been a record yet if Roy hadn't got his father in a good humor one day and confessed.

That was certainly a tapeworm linguine on the part of Roy. The pater reached for the telephone and Roy thought his father was going to call the police. But, the boy, listening heard something like this:

"Hello, this Parker, Hortch & Shoehan. This ... Henry C. Pierce. My fool son's gone and got himself married. I want [illegible] off."

Exciting Scene With Father.

Then the father and son had one of these conversations that take place when they see that the doors are carefully closed and fastened so that a third person may not wander in on them.

"You nuts, give this woman up," said the father. "She's dragging you down."

"I'm satisfied," replied the son. "I want her and I want at least $25,000 a year settled on her as my wife."

"I won't give it. I won't give her a cent," replied Pierce, with the tenacity of a Standard Oil man in a real rage; "won't have anything to do with this matter."

"Well," said the young man, suggestive of [illegible] can go back on the stage—"

"Say her go!"

"She can go back on the stage and be known by the name Pierce—"

"What!"

"She can get $500 a week."

The father glared. Young Pierce lighted a fresh cigarette. He also reached over to a decanter and poured out a drink. He was smoking from forty to sixty cigarettes and taking thirty-five to forty drinks a day at this time.

"She has said that she will do this," declared young Pierce, "unless a change takes place."

Pierce rose to his [illegible] He looked his son in the face, the steel of his eyes cutting through the cigarette smoke.

"I'll see what I'll do," said the father. "I'll do nothing absolutely rash for that woman."

[illegible] Roy Pierce took an automobile [illegible] the motor had a hard time pulling him through. They sent him to the Central Valley [illegible].

On March 30 of last year a suit for divorce was begun against Mrs. Pierce. That was the first that the public knew of the marriage of the young couple.

Lady Betty was furious. She declared that she loved her husband and that they had kidnapped her.

"I love him," exclaimed the young woman "and I'll get him back. They can't [illegible] with $10,000 nor [illegible] $100,000."

Then Lady Betty quoted this from Mrs. Browning in an exquisitely pathetic voice.

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee to the depth and breadth and [illegible]
My soul can reach when feeling out of sight
For the ends of being and ideal grace.

Then young Mrs. Pierce declared [illegible]

I married my husband for himself, not for his money. He was the sweetest, subtest, most balanced, finest hearted gentleman that I ever knew [illegible]

I love him still. He is twenty times [illegible] than I am. I don't know why he loves me, but I don't care. I'm more than twenty-eight. When I met him in England two years ago I loved him. When I met him again I knew he was the man I had been looking for.

I never knew him to go along Broadway. He didn't drink anything to speak of.

Young Mrs. Pierce said that she had not met her husband's father and that she didn't want to.

One night when he was at our house he was called on the telephone and Mrs. Pierce, "said he—he didn't come back."

The marriage was annulled last October at Poughkeepsie. There was no contest by Mrs. Pierce. There was a rumor of a heavy cash settlement. She denied this.

"I did not wish to defend the suit for private reasons," Lady Betty wrote to Justice Morschauser, who set her married knot for the second time in her life.

III.

But Standard Oil had lost its charm
To gain her sad condition;
And searching for a shield from harm
She found—the opposition!

Trouble is a great test of love. Irvin Chapman was a splendid young man and thoroughly acceptable in most situations, with the exception of that trying one—husband. He liked the gentle art of love-making, but was lacking in the prose of home making. Lady Betty followed the sliding course of his love as long as she could see it—then she began to look for other stars to guide her.

Roy Pierce, like a regent comet flashed over the horizon. He was appealing and, somewhat in haste, he was accepted as her sun of perpetual happiness. But when Papa Pierce appeared the supposed sun was snuffed like a candle.

It was during these days that the billows of trouble began to break on

WELLESLEY HAS ITS 'TREE DAY' REVELS

Girls as Quaint Fairy Folk Participate in Picturesque Campus Ceremonies

Tree Day brought to Wellesley College yesterday afternoon a throng of former collegians, who watched the girls of the four undergraduate classes present one of the most elaborate and most beautiful Tree Day programs that the college has known.

As fairy folk, Brownies, dryads, fauns, shepherdesses, Mother Goose characters, the undergraduates were daintily quaint.

The tree exercises proper brought witty speeches, dancing to the strains of the class poem and the freshman myth, were particularly charming.

The color scheme for costumes in the opening procession was considered especially happy, variety being arranged, without jumble on the one side or monotony on the other.

Last night the postponed production of "Much Ado About Nothing" was given by the Wellesley College Shakespeare Society on the grassy stage of Rhododendron Hollow. The cast and other details were the same as planned for the original production yesterday afternoon, which was put over till last night on account of rain.

Procession on the Campus.

For the Tree Day exercises in the afternoon the college grounds were jealously guarded lest any outsiders—especially male—should intrude.

The Tree Day procession started at 3 o'clock, with the audience disposed along the slopes of College Hall hill, overlooking the campus.

By the general scheme of staging, the campus was transformed to Fairyland. From pretty Rhododendron Hollow came a fanfare of trumpets by the heralds. The latter were the girls of the department of hygiene and physical education, formerly the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics.

Then came the sophomores, garbed as Fairyland folks. They included the Pied Piper, piping to the children; Little Boy Blues, dryads, gnomes, Simple Simons and so on. Following them were the freshmen as fairy maidens and princesses.

At the same time the Queen of the Day, Nellie Zuckerman, came from the little hollow toward College Hall, leading the Morlais to meet the Fairies and join in the revels. She was attended by the Cap and Gown aides, Beatrice E. Clark, Dorothy Hart, Corinne Searle, Katherine Martenson, Jesse S. Weaver, Jean Robertson, Katherine S. Cowling and Marjorie Sherman.

Juniors in White.

Then came the seniors in cap and gown, carrying Jacque roses, their class flower, and followed by the juniors in white, each girl carrying a tall blue iris (junior class flower).

The freshman mistress of ceremonies (Ruth Chapin, a blonde) was in yellow and the freshman chief was in graded tints of creamy yellow to burnt orange. Thus it was announced that yellow is the freshman class color.

After the procession came the address of welcome by Helen Goss, the senior president, and the senior oration by Mildred Washburn.

Then came the presentation and reception of the spade, a quaint ceremony. The spade was brought on in a big box. The "Spirit of the Spade" (Dorothy Allen) stepped out and spoke for the sophomores a clever speech with good natured "digs" at the freshmen. Then the "Spirit of the Spade" vanished into the box again.

Then Esther Parshall, keeper of the spade, for the freshman class, presented to Beatrice for the "Spirit of the Spade" the spade which she took from the box in the real spade, with the promise of all freshmen classes on it in these class colors.

Miss Persall received the Spade in return with a speech in which she "complimented" the sophomores Elizabeth Pulling gave the freshman oration, in which she announced yellow as the freshman color, yellow wood as its tree and the ward rose as its flower.

The Senior Poem.

The senior mistress of ceremonies (Nellie Zuckerman) repeated the senior poem, "The Rose Queen," by Nellie V. Foote. Then the poem was acted in senior dances. The dancing girls included Oneah Beulah Hepburn; "Mayrai Youth" Nancy Parker; Mary Beerbower; Miriam McLeod; "Leader of Violet Robed Spirits" Ruth Johnson; "Leader of Rose Maidens" Gwendolyn Weller; "Leader of Mortal Men," Margery Mackillop; "Leader of Spirit Maidens" Ruth Johnson.

Then all went over to Longfellow Pond to see the freshman myth dramatized. The argument was: Mortal children are supposed to try to get from the Fairy Lepreaun his charge of the fairy gold. They are vanquished by the Fairies. But the Lepreaun presents to the Freshman Mistress of Ceremonies the ward rose, the class flowers, which lay hidden in the gold. The solo dancers for the charming myth were Lepreaun, Agnes Pratt; Fairies, Ward Rose, Gertrude Folger; Children's Leader, Ethelyn Johnson; Head of Pipers, Margaret Garside.

New Priest's First Mass.

Rev. John Patrick Grady, eldest son of the late Mayor Grady of East Boston, was ordained priest yesterday in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York. He made his theological studies at Dunwoodie Seminary.

The ordination was attended by the young priest's mother, his sister, Mrs. John H. Galvin, his brother, Lieutenant Ronan C. Grady, U. S. N., and Harry and Walter Grady. Fr. Grady will say his first public mass in the Star of the Sea Church, East Boston, this morning.

Mrs. Davis, Suing Again, Really Means It This Time

'Desertion' New Divorce Charge Against Author

MR. AND MRS. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS (AT RIGHT) AND BESSIE M'COY

Friends Suspect Cooling of Platonic Love of the Noted Couple

The story-reading and theatre-going sets in Boston and the cottage colony and villagers down in the pretty Bussards Bay town of Marion are all agog with interest, mingled with regret, that Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis of Chicago and Marion again has filed suit for divorce against Richard Harding Davis, the author, war correspondent and playwright.

Boston story-readers are interested because Richard Harding Davis, as the author of "The Bar Ministers" the "Van Bibber" tales, "Soldiers of Fortune" and other stories, is of literary distinction

The cottagers of Marion and the cottage colony there are interested because it was in that conservative Summer place the boy and girl romance began which led to the wedding twelve years ago. It was then thought the boy and girl sweetheartship had ripened into the genuine love which is necessary to happy married life.

A Platonic Match.

That the marriage really was one of sympathetic tastes in art, literature and mode of life, rather than of genuine love, that it was more platonic affection than heart sentiment, is now believed to be the cause of the separation of the couple two years ago, or what Mrs. Clark now alleges to be her husband's desertion.

Theatre goers are interested in the case, not only in Mr. Davis the author of "The Galloper," "The Dictator" and other plays, but his name has been mentioned in connection with that of Miss Bessie McCoy, the actress and dancer.

Miss McCoy was in Boston last January as a feature of the "Ziegfeld Follies." The fourth number in the "Follies" was the burlesque "Everywife, a travesty on the morality play "Everyman." Bessie McCoy had the role of Squabina, the name part breaking up the home of "Everyman."

Mrs. Davis seeks her divorce quietly, as possible. In fact it was said at one time she had given up the idea, when the matter first came in the Supreme Court of New York County N. Y., in November, 1910.

From that time on there were attempted reports that the suit would end and would not be pressed. As late as December 22, last Mrs. Davis was quoted in Chicago where she now lives, as saying she would not carry the suit to trial.

This statement apparently was contradicted when on May 11, Mrs. Davis in the New York Supreme court asked for and was granted her suit be reinstated. No explanation was given for the delay. She signed the order removing the case from the calendar

Immediately on receipt of a revealing row sprang up with renewed persistence. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Davis would comment on the fact that on May 11, 1910, Cook County Superior court of Illinois, She alleged desertion and warp asked for a statement, declined to talk. Desertion for two years or more is sufficient ground for an Illinois divorce. In her bill of complaint Mrs. Davis alleges Davis "willfully deserted her on May 1, 1910, and absented himself without reasonable cause for the space of two years." It is upon this point test the suit is brought.

The two "desertion" years, as named by Mrs. Davis, were up on May 1 last. The day later Mrs. Davis withdrew her New York suit and changed to Chicago where the charge of desertion is available.

That Romantic Wooing.

From Mrs. Davis' renewal of the suit two things are taken for granted—that she intends to press the divorce proceeding and that she means to retain her freedom with the least possible notoriety and court procedure. Whether divorce is obtained or not, there seems to be no doubt that the romance of Richard Harding Davis and Cecil Clark Davis is at an end and has been for several months.

Friends of the couple view this regretfully. It seemed, when the marriage took place, as though the couple had been blessed with a love affair particularly pretty and with a flavor of quaintly and romance. Mr. Davis made millions of women ecstasy in admiration when he sent a London messenger boy 3,000 miles to Chicago bearing a betrothal ring for Miss Cecil Clark.

Women, particularly young ones, said that here was a man, surely, who loved a girl devotedly and who thought no expense or pains too great to honor her.

Davis was in London when he proposed to Miss Clark was at the Summer place in Marion So Davis proposed by cable. He was accepted the same way. Then was the brief but sufficient answer which was sent under the ocean to him by Miss Clark.

Just Called a Messenger.

Then Davis rang for a messenger boy. One came named Jaggers, destined to be made famous.

Said Davis to the boy: "Take this package to Miss Cecil Clark, No. 1801 Prairie avenue, Chicago. Do it quickly."

Jaggers did so and he had received from his extraordinary employer. Then came in the newspapers about the man who was sending his sweetheart an engagement ring from London to Chicago by messenger boy.

Miss Clark, who was at her Chicago home by the time that trustworthy Jaggers arrived, received the ring. Jaggers was promptly tipped and went back to London heavily "tipped." When the wedding took place Richard Harding Davis, in making a dashing, most romantic, love story of a hero six feet tall who fought like a fiend, yet was sweet and tender in his wooing, a veritable Galahad whom no girl could resist. He was a superman, the hero.

Readers of "Soldiers of Fortune" said, "What an ideal husband the author of such a story and the creator of such a hero must be."

In his stories about Courtlandt Van Bibber, a rich young New Yorker, Davis pictured a gentleman of characteristics which women seek, but, it is feared, seldom find. He was handsome, brave, quick witted and eager to do anything he could for femininity, especially in distress.

[illegible] of the Van Bibber tales was where the hero aided young Mr Standish and Miss Winthrop, of Boston to elope in New York, having first thoughtfully sent Standish's elder [illegible] for the couple in Chicago.

In "The Bar Minister" Davis again is to every lover of dogs. The story one of those regular honest "doggish" yarns that look like, also some women think is silly writing with a plot.

In a weekly magazine recently he had a [illegible] poodle performed a fine English polish, poker and a press agent, that was a short story gem.

It would strike the average reader of these entertaining romances and tales that Richard Harding Davis must be a pretty compunctionable sort of thing.

And, then that Cinderella Bess Jaggers took with the engagement ring is taken [illegible] Well what's [illegible] Mrs. Davis says [illegible] But in motion [illegible] What caused the desertion, no one knows.

Mrs. Cecil Clark Davis is no idle prodent, talented woman. She paints and draws well. She is the daughter of a wealthy family. Her friends say she appreciate Richard Harding Davis' literary abilities. But these did not necessarily make her love him.

She liked to travel and was fond of [illegible] Davis found her about as a newspaper correspondent and had the gift of [illegible] writing.

Their knew each other from childhood Summer days in Marion. John M Clark of Chicago, father of Miss Cecil, had a Summer place there. Richard, Jr., Leslie Davis, the famous editor of the Philadelphia Ledger, and brother of Richard Harding Davis, was a friend of Prof. Cecil Cleveland and Joe Jefferson, both of whom had cottages in Marion. Richard Davis had a place there too.

The Clarks and Richard Davis boy practically grew up together Summers and Fall. It is said that one of the underlying causes of the subsequent misunderstanding was that Richard Davis never bestowed his love upon Miss Cecil Clark. Instead he was afraid of [illegible] quite companionship for the flame of real love. They actually did their friends now believe, that the feeling was more platonic then they realized.

Their Happy Years.

For some years after their marriage Mr and Mrs. Davis seemed most happy Davis wrote more and more. He went on special assignments around the world for the publication of the time. Mrs. Davis accompanied him on two of these trips and apparently was as happy as a girl could wish.

About five years ago there were rumors of coldness between the two, due not to any lover affair, but more to lack of sympathy. It was rumored that Davis began [illegible] and to live in New York while Mrs. Davis was living her parents in Chicago or Marion.

Davis meanwhile was more and more engaged in the "Soldiers of Fortune" and "Dictator" and "Galloper" plays. His story "The Lion Hunt" was a delectable one. He wrote "Ranson's Folly" and "The Dictator" for the stage. His name became more drawn into the circle of stage people and his association and their interests.

Then in the Fall of 1910 that Davis was mentioned as interested in Bessie McCoy, then appearing in "The Echo" in New York. It was said that Davis [illegible] Miss McCoy much [illegible] dancing. It was [illegible] Davis was a writing and [illegible] theatre with much dignity.

"Impossible as Husband."

PILGRIMS LOSE TO CHICAGO IN HEAVY HITTING GAME, 7 TO 5

Arthur Devlin's Poor Work Causes Downfall of Kling's Fighting Team; Locals Hit the Ball Hard and Often

Walter Dickson Ineffective in Pinches and Was Knocked Out of Box by Cubs; Perdue Was Also Treated Harshly

By L. R. MURDOCH.

Chicago, 7.....Boston, 5

ARTHUR DEVLIN is a good old soul.

He was particularly generous yesterday afternoon. So generous that he gave away a good, hard-earned baseball game to Cholly Murphy's Chicago Cubs. It was kind of Mr. Devlin. But, unfortunately, he gave away something that did not belong to him a game that Jack Kling and his band of athletes had worked for, earned and stowed away. For which Kling and his brave Pilgrims walked away from the Walpole Street Grounds, much disgusted later in the day, and 5,000 "fans" hiked homeward, equally sad and disgusted.

The Pilgrims came home from a long, dusty western campaign, and brought the Cubs along with them. It was the first time we have seen the ex-"champs" since last Fall. The Pilgrims were very accommodating to the Cubs out West and gave them all they asked for. But when they got the former champions out in Walpoin street yesterday afternoon, they knocked them down, choked them and tore out of their hides a baseball game which, as stated before, were ticketed Boston," and packed away in John Montgomery Ward's cooler, by a 4 to 3 score in the fourth inning.

How It Happened.

Then came Arthur Devlin. Two Cubs were down and shot to pieces in the fifth inning, when Tinker slapped one to "Hub" Perdue's headers. The ball took three hops, one after the other, landing smit of Arthur Devlin. Tinker trotted towards first base, while Arthur took one step to the right, stumbled over a pebble and buried the ball.

The pellet went in a direct line towards the South Pole. The only visible reason why it stopped short of the Pole was that it lacked steam enough to carry it through the Columbus avenue fence.

Long after the ball hit the fence Tinker hit first, and while Ben Houser raced around looking for the rebound, Tinker kept on until he hit second. "Hub" Perdue was mad clear through. He had come into the ball game to save it, and apparently he had saved it. But nobody seemed to appreciate his efforts, so what's the use?

Had Mr. Devlin been a bit more accurate, the inning would have ended there, and possibly the game might have finished 5 to 3 in favor of Boston. But after Mr Devlin had stirred up the mess, Zimmerman doubled to the centre field fence, W. Miller singled to right, and Vic Saier lifted a high one into the right field bleachers for four bases, by grace of all which, the Cubs were given four undeserved runs.

Some Bargain Pitchers.

It was a day of bargain offerings in the pitching department. Frank Chance and Ed Reulbach, our veteran friend, for inspection and after we had looked him over, taken his measure and walloped him good and proper, Reulbach strolled back to the bench and another old friend, Charley Smith, issued forth. Charley South reached the Cubs' payroll via the "down and out" route. Lots of things happened to him before he reached the Boston Red Sox. The Red Sox let him down down the line, whore Frank Chance found him, picked him up, gave him a new uniform and set him to work. Smith looked like he would follow Reulbach for awhile, but changed his mind and pitched the Pilgrims into submission.

Johnny Kling's first offering was Walter R. Dickson Walter set the Cubs back with great regularity until they found out his real name and address in the third. After they packed away three runs in that session, Walter was eliminated from the festivities and "Hub" Perdue, who had been playing catch out in left field, was called upon to earn some money. "Hub" put 'em away in rotation until Devlin stubbed his toe, after which George "Hetty" Tyler, "the boy from Ky.," did some work, and barring two hits in the seventh, Tyler had the Cubs eating out of his hands.

A Bit of Comedy.

Both sides sent a man to first via the safe hit route in the first inning, but both were nailed trying to steal second. In the second inning W. Miller hit safely, with

EXETER IS DEFEATED BY HARVARD, 3 TO 1

A fine victory was all that Harvard had to get in the game with Exeter at Soldiers Field yesterday afternoon, the Academy team putting up a great fight and just missed out by a score of 3 to 1. The game was limited to eight innings to enable the Exeter team to catch a train for Boston sent in three different pitchers with an idea of trying them out for future games and although the Exeter boys secured but four hits they were in the game all the time and held their opponents scoreless until the fifth inning.

Captain Potter was away from third base on scout duty and his place was taken by Hanlin and Olcott, both of whom played creditable ball. Olcott who covered third base, played the feature game for the Crimson, materially boosting his batting average by securing four hits in four trips to the plate.

Sid Clark, the heavy hitting first baseman, did splendid work with a sacrifice hit, one for a trip to second and the other [illegible]

SUNDAY AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

YALE FRESHMEN WIN GAME FROM HARVARD FRESHMEN

YALE'S GREAT RALLY BEATS OUT TIGERS

NEW HAVEN, June 1.—More thankless than a serpent's hook, was the record of Knox Levy, the Princeton pitcher, in the seventh inning today when the Yale team found him for five runs, clinching the game, 6 to 1. The Tigers scored one solitary run, coming in the second inning. It looked mountainous to the Yale Bulldog till the break in the seventh, although the Elis tied the score in the sixth.

The game abounded with sensational chief being the phenomenal play that closed the game when Rhoades smashed a terrific grounder to Captain Merritt, who was unable to field it. The ball bounded high to Blossom who snatched it up and hurled it to first retiring the Tiger side.

Three double plays punctuated the game, and all by Yale's fast infield. Bennett and Blossom were the pivots in two that stifled Tiger batting rallies. Spectacular in the extreme was the circus catch of Gross in deep left, off Captain Merritt, in the sixth.

The hit looked good for three bases, but Gross leaped up after misjudging, and desperately clawed and clung to it. As Pendleton was on second, the catch saved two runs. The Tiger batsmen were unable to find either pitcher successfully.

Parker also received three hits. Aside from the whirlwind plugging in the seventh, Lear kept the Yale batting scattered Parker scored Princeton's only run in the second, when he singled to centre and took second on Rhoades' grounder which touched Hartwell's finger tips, but which Bennett chased across second base, recalled and pushed to first ahead of Rhoades.

Parker raced home when Shaw singled to left and Gross juggled the grounder. Yale evened the score in the fifth on Burdett's crash which bounded away from White, followed by Hartwell's single to right, which drifted through Laird's legs. Poor coaching prevented Hartwell from scoring before the ball was recovered. Yale's batting line pushed five hits and as many hits over the plate in the seventh.

ARMY IS VICTORIOUS.

Take Annual Game from Midshipmen by Score of 8 to 7.

ANNAPOLIS, June 1.—Though holding the lead for seven innings, the Naval Academy was on the whole outplayed by the Military Academy this afternoon, the Army lads winning by 8 to 7.

The Midshipmen scored three times in the two opening innings, and in spite of home-runs by Merrillat and Lyman of the Army, in the fourth and sixth, respectively, held the lead until the eighth inning when Seibert weakened and the visitors scored three runs, but were passed by the Navy, who duplicated that number in its half.

Scoring three runs on inning had grown to be a habit, and another run was registered by the Army in the ninth.

The Midshipmen scored once in the eighth, but not in advance of scoring another run by poor judgment. With two outs on, Lyman reached first on second when Adams hit over short, and the next batter, Fisher, was safe on first, but turned into the diamond and was touched out by Cook. Score:

DEVLIN LOSES A GAME BY A FANTASTIC ERROR

one out, and Saier potted a long liner at "Doc" Miller. Bill Sweeney raced for second base as if the ball was going safe, and the Chicago base runner, evidently taking his cue from Sweeney instead of from his own coach, started for the base, too. He was at second when "Doc" Miller gathered in the fly, but taking no chance of his return, Sweeney "shooed" him on toward third, while "Doc" hurriedly doubled him out with a toss to Houser. All of which pleased the crowd.

"Doc" Miller drove one to Tinker, who fumbled, in the second, and Jackson scorched him along. Houser popped to Tinker, but Devlin reached first on four wide ones. Then Johnny Kling sent a single to centre, scoring Miller. Devlin hesitated between second and third and was an easy out.

Nothing disturbing happened in Chicago's parts of the third, but the Pilgrims all went out in their session. Dickson pounded one to Archer, who fumbled, and McDonald singled. Lavan sacrificed to Archer, and Schmidt drove a screamer through the box, scoring McDonald. Bill Miller pushed a single between Archer and Doyle, scoring Newnam and sending Schmidt to third. Jackson poked one at Zimmerman, who dropped it, and Sweeney crossed the rubber, Miller advancing to third. Hooper forced Jackson, Meyers to Tinker. Miller and Houser tried a double steal, but "Doc," a little tardy in starting for home, was caught at the plate.

Then Mr. Dickson fell from grace. He passed Schulte, and Tinker drove a hot one past Hooper. Zimmerman scored both of them with a screaming triple between Campbell and Jackson. Tinker left field for home. On W. Miller's out, Zimmerman pulled Dickson that the score was now warm for the Pilgrims. Houser worked a hard, and "Hick" Pardue took up the gauntlet. "Hick" had fun out in a jiffy.

In Boston's half it looked like the same old story. Archer led off with a single. Reulbach had departed, and Smith pass Devlin. Kling produced another single, filling bases all around. Then Devlin whiffed the breezes—as they call a strike-out—Devlin was caught between third base and the plate when McDonald hit to Zimmerman, and Campbell filled one to Tinker.

Pardue was sailing along smoothly in the fifth, when Arthur Devlin stubbed his toe. The end story has already been told. In their half the Pilgrims made their total five runs and looked as if they might win the game. But, again, they didn't. Reseue...

Harvard Winner of Lacrosse Championship

Captain Gustafson Is Battered With Clubs

Swarthmore Men Hammer the Harvard Leader With Their Clubs, Knocking Out Teeth and Dislocating His Shoulder.

Gustafson Is Game and, Notwithstanding Injuries, Scores Four of His Team's Seven Goals; Crimson Team Speedy

THE Harvard lacrosse team won the Intercollegiate lacrosse championship of the United States yesterday afternoon by defeating the Swarthmore team, the champions of the southern half of the country, by a score of 7 to 3.

The home team played the best game that it has shown this year and there was never a doubt about the result, the score at the end of the first half being 3 to 0 in favor of Harvard.

Captain Fin Gustafson of the Harvard team gave it pretty an exhibition of stick work and general gameness as has ever been seen in the Stadium.

From the start of the game the visiting defense piled on him for the Crimson leader and battered him on the head and shoulders with their clubs. He was knocked unconscious once and had to have his face bound up. His shoulder was dislocated and he lost a couple of teeth.

Notwithstanding these injuries he kept in the game and scored four of the seven goals made by his team. Blackett ably seconded him and scored a brace of goals, as did Cullina of the Southern team.

The Crimson aggregation showed much more speed and stamina than their rivals and were fresh between the halves while the Swarthmore players were badly exhausted.

This is the third year in succession that the Harvard team has won the championship. The Swarthmore players appeared to be much smaller and slower than their opponents, but gave the Crimson team the best fight that it had this spring.

LONG DISTANCE RACE BRINGS FORTH WORLD'S RECORDS

Showing of American Cars in the Longest Distance Track Race Proves Them to Be the Equals of Any, and They Capture World's Records from Foreign Made Cars.

By J. C. KERRISON.

While it is true that even greater speed than this was made by Ralph DePalma up to the 402nd-mile mark of the contest, when [illegible] with an average of 83 miles an [illegible] fact that his machine was not [illegible] to withstand the great grinding pace and fell by the wayside, while Dawson, in an American-built car, after having exercised great generalship throughout the contest, was able to bring his car home in as good condition as when it started, [illegible] of the wear and tear of three and machine.

Dawson's victory should not be belittled because of the unfortunate accident that put DePalma, the greatest sport on the American race track today, out of the running. It was [illegible] to [illegible] for construction that made it possible for the American car to force itself into first place defeating the car which so recently won the Santa Monica race, and which permitted it to be in such a condition that when the mishap occurred to DePalma it could go to the front and finish strong, miles ahead of all others.

DePalma's was a [illegible] misfortune [illegible] its true sportsmanship can not for a single moment be questioned. This is the second race that DePalma has lost in this [illegible] be remembered that at Savannah two years ago when in the leading position and looking like a winner of the Grand Prize he was put out of the race by cylinder trouble at the opening of the very last lap.

Taxi Cab Is the Most Abused Type

It Is Put Through a Pace That Tests to the Limit of Auto Construction.

The taxi cab is the most abused type of motor vehicle—operated by careless drivers at reckless speed, in and out between trucks and pillars, frequently jolted by cars, racked by short turns and abrupt stops. It is put through a pace that tests to the limit the vital mechanics of automobile construction.

Lee Meeman Taxi Cab Company, operating cars daily in St. Louis records a [illegible] thorough test of a number of [illegible] known cars before finally adopting the Mood car for their regular service. Manager Isaacs stated recently that the adoption by his company of Moon cars was the result of an elimination contest held by them. The questions of efficiency and economy were thoroughly gone into.

Ford Factory Has Record Output With Increased Efficiency of Employes.

In the matter of daily output and shipment a startling feat was accomplished recently by the Ford factory in the shipping of 693 cars in 540 minutes. Four hundred and seven freight cars were required for this shipment one day's output.

This record was demonstration of Mr. Ford's theory that in raising the wages of employees 15 per cent and reducing the working day by one hour he would correspondingly increase the efficiency of the workers. His employees have responded nobly to Mr. Ford's voluntary generosity, and the scientific efficiency thus inspired more than offsets the increase in the pay roll.

Chorus Girls Ride In Three-Ton Truck

Invited to Go "Motoring," but Were Game When Big Velie Vehicle Arrived.

A bunch of chorus girls in the Spring Maid Company were invited to go motoring by Manager Fred Braddell of the Velie Boston branch the other day and at the appointed hour and place of meeting a three-ton Velie truck drove up. The girls were game and climbed aboard.

The big truck loaded with the bunch of girls attracted a lot of attention as they rolled across the city to the Middlesex Fells. Three hours were devoted to motoring in the big power wagon, yet the girls didn't complain for they had more fun than they would have had seated on the ten-inch cushion of a touring car.

They marveled at the remarkable ease of riding, and operations, and when the trip was over they made Manager Braddell promise to take a larger crowd out next Sunday. The girls are going to get a big picnic basket, fill it with a lot of good things to eat and motor in the truck into the country about twenty miles from Boston and spend the day.

GLIDDEN TOUR TO START IN DETROIT

Run Will End In New Orleans and Stop Will Be Made in Indianapolis.

The Glidden tour for 1912, which the A. A. A. now designates as the "National Reliability Tour" for the Glidden, Alderson and A. A. A. trophies, will start in Detroit and after a 1,900-mile journey will end in New Orleans. A night stop will be made in Indianapolis, which made a strong bid to have the overnight in that city.

In the planning of the details of the tour, President Robert P. Hooper of the American Automobile Association asked Dr. C. E. Dutton of Minneapolis to serve as vice chairman of the Touring Information Board which this year will have charge of the event in charge. Dr. Dutton has had a widespread experience in touring competitions, is president of the Minnesota State Automobile Association, and last year served as the referee of the State Association run from the twin cities to Helena, Mont.

The path-finding trip may not take place for several weeks owing to the condition of the roads, especially in Louisiana. There is pronounced sterling for the honor of laying out the route of the "Lakes-to-Gulf" tour, which will be covered in detail, and will be added to the national routes which the A. A. A. touring bureau is gradually developing in its covering of the entire country.

The date of the tour is not decided, but early in October seems to be generally preferred, and a longer [illegible] of the [illegible] covered will be put more than ten days including a Sunday stop in a city capable of caring for the party comfortably. [illegible] entertainment will be given [illegible] from the beginning to the end, and Detroit intends to outdo herself in hospitality. There will be opportunity of visiting the large automobile plants.

After the tour has had its satisfying finale in New Orleans, there will come for those who care to make it a supplementary trip to the [illegible] of Panama, though the committee [illegible] to advise taking automobiles there [illegible] though Uncle Sam is engaged in building a fine highway across the [illegible] which divides the Atlantic from the Pacific. The tour, however, will give no building at Iquitos through the country traversed.

NEW PACKARD DEALER.

Carl G. Fisher, to Handle It in Indianapolis.

Carl G. Fisher, president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, has identified himself with the Packard organization in the capacity of dealer in Indianapolis. He has started the erection of a sales and service building, which will be one of the finest of its kind in the middle west, will also be the headquarters of the Prest-O-Lite Company, of which Mr. Fisher is controlling stockholder.

The business in Packard cars and trucks will be conducted under the name of Carl G. Fisher & Company. The announcement comes unheralded and will be a distinct surprise to the retail trade. The Fisher organization is prepared for an aggressive campaign in Indianapolis and the adjacent territory.

Chalmers Exhibit How Car Is Made

Auto Educational Feature on Display In Whitten-Gilmore Salesrooms.

The Whitten-Gilmore Company have just received from the Chalmers Motor Company one of the most interesting and educational exhibits which has ever been made to show all the parts which go to make up an automobile. This Chalmers educational exhibit was first shown at the Boston Automobile Show, and the great interest that was manifested in this exhibit at this time, convinced the Chalmers Motor Company that it would assist greatly in the sale of their automobiles, if similar exhibitions were made up for the larger cities of its country and the exhibit now at the Whitten Gilmore Company is the result.

This exhibit consists of a collection of more than one hundred different parts which are machined to an accuracy of less than one-thousandth part of an inch. With these parts are a set of test gauges and scales. The flaw of the scales is to show how accurately Chalmers cars are balanced, weighing one part against its mate and adding other parts until practically all working parts of the motor are shown perfectly balanced.

This is the first time a motor car manufacturer has actually demonstrated the method of building a motor car. Quality in a motor car is a question of manufacturing quite as well as design and materials, and the Chalmers Motor Company are building these exhibits to teach the public how to know a rightly built car. Comparatively few of even those who own cars realize the accuracy of workmanship with which must be put in a motor car to get [illegible] power [illegible] quick and general smoothness of operation.

ECONOMY IN TRUCKS.

Five-Ton Vehicle Saves Firm $4,200 Annually.

The officials of the Star-O-Life Feed & Milling Company, New Orleans, are not only firm believers in the advantages of the motor truck, but estimate that the [illegible] Motor Truck saves the company, annually, about $4,200.

The truck is used for delivering goods to railroad and city customers. It carries a load of 10,000 lbs. consisting of 10,000 pounds and covers a distance daily averaging between forty and fifty miles, consuming seven to eight gallons of gasoline per day.

The manager of the company states "the truck is doing hauling at a cost of a little less than 50 per cent of the drayage by teams. Taking 70,000 pounds as the daily haul and multiplying it by 300 working days, the result is 21,000,000 pounds yearly. This equals 10,500 tons, and figuring the drayage by teams at 75c per ton, means a yearly expenditure of $7,500. Taking the 10,500 tons and calculating it at 40c per ton as the cost of hauling by motor truck, and the result is $4,200 yearly. The motor truck therefore saves $4,200 yearly for the company."

New Sales Manager.

Announcement has just been made by the Abbott Motor Company of Detroit, Mich., that they have secured the services of Mr. Harry H. Van Deusen, one of the oldest and best known salesmanagers in the trade.

Mr. Van Deusen, who will take up his work June 1 in the capacity of assistant general sales manager, is one of the best known men in the automobile business today, and is personally acquainted with almost every motor car dealer in the United States.

"My Dear Fellow, Get No-Rim-Cut Tires"

Advised Today by 200,000 Users

Some 200,000 motor car owners are today advising No-Rim-Cut tires.

They have tested out, in the past few years, over a million Goodyear tires. They have proved our claim that No-Rim-Cut tires cut tire bills right in two.

They have told one another. Now these patent tires by far outsell any other tire in existence.

10% Oversize

No-Rim-Cut Tires are 10 per cent over the rated size. That means 10 per cent more air—10 per cent added carrying capacity. And that, with the average car, adds 25 per cent to the tire mileage.

No-Rim-Cut tires end rim-cutting forever. That means another average saving of 23 per cent.

Ask Any User

Ask any man who knows. There are 200,000 of them. You will never again buy tires that rim-cut—never buy skimpy tires.

Our 1912 Tire Book, based on 13 years of tire making, is filled with facts you should know. Ask us to mail it to you.

Marion

THE recent reorganization of the Marion Motor Car Company makes possible a far broader and larger program of manufacturing, sales and service expansion than this famous concern has ever before enjoyed. The organization as it now stands will be one of the industry's big and important factors. The capital has been greatly increased. The annual output will be more than doubled. Additional plants are already under way. Facilities on all sides are being enlarged and made more complete. Several of the industry's best known men are to direct the many progressive and permanent plans; in fact, the entire executive staff is composed of men who stand exceptionally high in automobile circles.

For over eight years the Marion Car has made a phenomenal record. There has never been a year when the supply was as great as the demand. Its thousands of owners will tell you of a satisfaction that is unique in its completeness. Pick out among your acquaintances, a Marion owner. He will tell you of its unusual merit and efficiency. You never hear a Marion owner complain.

The Marion is distinctly a family car. It is serviceable, safe and comfortable. It is big, powerful and beautiful. It is sound to the core.

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, June 1.—Stock markets are dull and are going to continue so for some time. The reason for this is a lack of the kind of demand which promotes genuine activity. The public is buying as little of anything as possible, as storekeepers will testify, and is showing especial disinclination to risk any money in speculation. The high cost of living eats up most of the income of the class which in the past has patronized commission houses, and if there is any surplus men who used to take kindly to margin chances are now pleasing their families more by buying automobiles.

With the price of copper metal where it is and with every probability of its going higher, with many copper companies getting where they can either pay or increase dividends, as some have already done, and the intrinsic value of shares enhancing, it might be expected that the public would think this the best of all times for investing in this class of securities. But stagnation of the market points to the conclusion there is either a dearth of money or deep seated skepticism as a retarding factor.

W. H. ROSS

SPOT COPPER VERY SCARCE.

It is possible that figures are questioned and that many think a large amount of unrefined copper has been cached somewhere. But if this is the case it should have been discovered by some of the experts who have been seeking the exact statistical position of the metal. Anyhow there is no question but that producers are making money and the demand is increasing every day. Domestic consumers who need immediate supplies are finding them hard to get. Spot copper is exceedingly scarce. Never in the history of the trade was so much of this material being used in manufacturing as at this moment. In Europe it is in such demand that statistics from across the water which will be published on Monday will reveal, it is predicted, a marked decrease in foreign supply. The amount now being consumed by American manufacturers, particularly in the Naugatuck Valley, in Connecticut, is added evidence that the price of the metal is more apt to soar than to decline. Everything indicates that the rate will be high for an indefinite period.

Price of Steel Going Up.

The tendency of the price of steel is also upwards. Consumers who have delayed in placing orders have reason to regret it already. But aside from present conditions in the trade, and they have distinctly improved since January 1, everything indicates that ere long there is going to cost more and more in the future. No matter how much facilities are increased production costs are pretty sure to rise in equal ratio. Not only will wages ascend but so will also the price of fuel. But the main reason why steel must go higher and higher in the future is for the reason of exhaustion of high-grade ore beds. While the ore supply cannot be increased, the demand for the finished product is growing with extraordinary rapidity every year. These are not loose times for building or anything else, but the business of the United States Steel Corporation and the independents has been close to capacity of late. With efficient management at points, good profits for steel companies seem assured for many years. I will be a long time before the biggest of them is likely to make such a per cent on its working as it did for the first quarter of 1912.

While more ships are will probably be discovered before the ultimate Indies, the exhaustion of the Lake Superior beds is not so many years off. In this country between 500,000,000 and 600,000,000 tons are being mined a year and the use of steel is be increasing at a fast clip. The assumption is sure to overstep reserves before raised supplies. The cost of production is so increasing fast and Andrew Carnegie had this fact in mind when he declared he sold his manufacturing business at a rather figure.

Average Profits in Sight.

Steel companies are going to make good average profits this year in spite of the low prices which were a source of comment on their part for the first five months of it. United States Steel Corporation earnings for the first half of 1912 will probably be about $43,000,000, and they may total as high as $100,000,000 for the month a year. As recently as March last they were but a little more than $7,000,000. It is expected that Republic Iron and Steel Company will be able to declare by the end of the first half of this year as much as 2% per cent earned on its preferred. Deit pefore Pittsburgh Steel earnings for the first half will it is estimated, be at the rate of more than 10 per cent for the year.

The outlook for many industrial corporations is better today than it is for most railroads, and that is why so securities of the latter have not been in so much market demand as those of the former. Aside from the suspicion that some of them have been overcapitalized, the high price records attained by a number of Industrial stocks are indicative of a general improvement.

Hoffmans have been operated under conditions which are not conducive to profitable, and it may be found that a number of very important ones are going to find additional to maintain dividend rates unless they are permitted to increase charges for freight. The development of big areas of the country depends upon railroad extensions which will not only be costly, but call for a long time to pay, can bring no returns for a long time. How to raise the money for such purposes is a serious question at a time when earnings do not increase at a rate proportionate to the growth of operating costs. The administration of some roads now owned by their patrons is finding them in manageable. Western roads are worse off on the whole than those in the East. The former are grappling with problems which affect the welfare of the nation.

Wreckers Caused Hostility.

For many years American railways have seemed to inspire a hostility on the part of the public which has been engendered in no other country. Much of it was inspired by a lack of appreciation on the part of railroad men themselves of how much it costs to transport freight, and more by financiers who sought control of roads to put them through receiverships in preference to trying to operate them for the equal benefit of minority stockholders. Many politicians have not elected to offer much help in settling matters.

Most of the legislation regarding roads has done more harm than good to them, but the men who manage them and are looked to for dividends think that the time states there are statutes which are going to operate to the detriment of many of those commonwealths. Anyhow, its evident that not long the people will make an effort to put up rates and if they do not in concert it will be a haphazard movement. Some roads corporations they have failed to take the public into their confidence. The new need publicity now and if what they say is true will have to conduct a long campaign among the people before they will command credence at the public ear.

Whatever may be said about legislative hamstrings put upon roads in the West, those in New England ought to admit that they have been very kindly considered by lawmaking bodies. A great many citizens of this section think that legislatures have been more prone to serve the roads than the public.

Iowa Fruit Crop Prospects.

DES MOINES, Ia., June 1.—A smaller fruit crop is expected in Iowa this year by comparison with last year's harvest. Apples are only thirty-five per cent, of a full crop, pears sixty-one per cent, cherries fifty-five per cent, and strawberries seventy per cent. The severe Winter said unfavorably on orchard trees.

"MOP" OUTLOOK IS GOOD.

President Bush Speaks with Optimism About Missouri Pacific.

NEW YORK, June 1 According to the estimates of President Bush of the Missouri Pacific road, it will have a good business at harvest time in Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska. Despite the stories of "wheat killers," he says that the wheat crop in those States promises to be a bumper one. He has just returned from a Western trip of his lined between Kansas City and Omaha and will make some important improvements are likely to be undertaken in the latter city. He is then advocating greater Government expenditures upon Mississippi river levees. Mr. Bush said: "The Government is spending hundreds of millions in construction of the Panama canal, but a tenth of that expended along the Mississippi would serve a vast area, and add tremendously to property values in the greatest agricultural section."

Owners to Get Moffat Road.

DENVER, June 1.—There are negotiations pending which it is believed here will result in the Denver, Northwestern & Pacific, known as the Moffat road, being restored to its owners within thirty days. Receivers were recently appointed, and representatives of them, the owners and holders of the notes for $3,500,000 will meet in New York on Monday to arrange a settlement. A dissolution of the receivership is hoped for because it is understood an adjudication of the difficulties may be reached by the note holders agreeing to an extension of the obligations.

How I Escaped the Chinese Bandits"

DOROTHY WHITNEY, THE NEW YORK HEIRESS AND BRIDE OF WILLARD D. STRAIGHT, TELLS HER UNUSUAL AND TERRIFYING EXPERIENCES IN ESCAPING FROM THE CRUEL CHINESE LOOTERS WHO LAID SIEGE TO THE PIERPONT MORGAN COMPOUND IN PEKIN.

MRS. WILLARD STRAIGHT, formerly Miss Dorothy Whitney, a bride of five months and heiress to $15,000,000, was forced to flee from her home in Peking during the late uprising there. Mr Straight, the "Lucky Straight" he is called in China, represents the Morgan interests in the Chinese Empire. When he won the youngest daughter of the late William C. Whitney for his bride he took her from a magnificent Fifth avenue mansion to the quaint little Morgan compound in the heart of Peking. It was from this home that she and her husband fled in terror to the American Legation.

It was an uprising of the soldiers that brought forth noted bandits and robbers of a less degree from their hiding places. These people were out for loot, and they invaded all quarters of Peking simultaneously. They killed low-born natives, ransacked temples and the houses of the wealthy Chinese, and after setting fire to miles of houses moved on to the foreign quarter. The Morgan compound was their Mecca. The first English word a Chinese learns nowadays is Morgan! To them Morgan is the synonym for untold wealth. Consequently they headed for the Morgan stronghold, and frightened the Straights most thoroughly who lost no time in fleeing to the Legation, leaving jewels, pictures and rare bric-a-brac to the looters.

Mrs. Straight has written letters to her girl friends depicting most graphically the scenes of the uprising and of the awesome flight through the narrow crooked streets of the ancient city. We are able to give selections from several of these letters.

"I must tell you, my dear J—— of the awful terror we lived under during those days, when the whole world expected to see Peking wiped from the map. But first I must tell you of the kind of houses we all live in here. You will then see why we made no effort to fight the bandits, although Willard had several kinds of guns in the house and I had my pearl-mounted revolver. Our compound is just like everybody else's in China—a collection of little one-story buildings that look like anything between Indian bungalows and pasteboard doll houses. The buildings are close together, and surrounded with a reed fence as inflammable as excelsior. They are as fragile as paper houses, and I never have become used to them.

"But, my dear, things got worse and worse. All our friends were horribly scared and sought safety in the various legations. We were amused at first, because, my dear, we felt so safe in our compound! Somehow, neither Willard nor myself thought the soldiers would attack Morgan property. And so we stayed in our little house and had our tea and dinner. But alas! Just as we were eating some delicious birds' nest pudding our compradore (man housekeeper) fell into the room.

"'Fly! fly!' he said. 'The bandits are coming, and the whole city is in flames!'

"We did not wait to gather up any of our belongings. I can tell you, my dear J——, when death is so near, pearls and diamonds and rare pictures don't amount to very much.

"As we drew near the thirty-foot wall that separates the Chinese from the Tartar city a new fear struck us! Would we find the gates closed? There are only three gates in the wall, and all gates are closed at sunset. If the gates were closed, suppose the guard was absent? Suppose he would not open to us? My dear, I died a thousand deaths as we came in sight of the gate.

"It was open. The guard had deserted his post at the first sign of trouble. We passed into the old city and headed toward Legation street. We could not make our way along the closely crowded [illegible] Streets. We had to turn and twist and [illegible] Oh, what smells! And what [illegible]

"This was where the fury of [illegible] break was concentrated, and the awful [illegible] of that uprising came back to my mind as we traveled along.

"I thought of the pretty bride of one of the American missionaries, who was locked fast in her house by a mob that then set fire to it.

"Just that morning, J——, I had read of the murder of a young American sent out to China to our own government. He had been attacked by a band and literally hacked to pieces. His parents will not be able to look at him, although what was left has been shipped to his home!

At last we reached the Legation. We could see the flames in the distance and hear the shrieks of the rioters, but we felt safe. I found that our experiences were no worse than those of the others gathered there.

"Do you remember Sally M[illegible], who came out here last year a bride? I found her in hysterics.

"Just at dawn she and B[illegible] were awakened by their comprador who warned them to fly, and poor Sally only had time to slip on a silk kimono and tie her head in a veil. She arrived at the Legation with only one slipper on and a big revolver gripped in her hand. To make things worse for poor Sally, there was no carriage to be had and B—— had to drag her to safety in a rickshaw. Poor B—— was laid up for days, he was so sore.

"So, after all, my dear, Willard and I got off very easily. We did lose lots of our beloved treasures, some of my wedding presents, but we got off alive and uninjured, and I think I was very lucky."

Sherlock Holmes Outdone by the New Scientific Detectives—No. 8

This Series Explains To-Day How the Modern Criminologist Detects and Exposes the Clever Forgers of Antiquities and Art Masterpieces

By WILLIAM J. BURNS,
The Most Famous American Detective.

Detective Wm. J. Burns.

It is, perhaps, not surprising that very widespread interest has been aroused by the use of the interesting little scientific instrument called the dictagraph, which I employed in connection with the McNamara dynamiting cases and elsewhere. The dictagraph is only one instance of the usefulness of modern science in detective work. The successful detection of crime has now largely passed out of the old system of haphazard guesswork, and is shaping itself along the lines of more strictly scientific study.

The recent progress of the professional criminologists of France and Germany is little understood in America, where very few detectives avail themselves of these new resources of science.

I am making a conservative statement when I say that the actual applications in real life in detective work of the methods of Professor Reiss, of the University of Lausanne; Professor Gross, of Germany, and others are often more bewildering to the uninformed than any of the imaginary detective work of Sherlock Holmes.

I am familiar with the work of the foreign detectives, and the records of recent modern scientific detection of crime given here on this page are very striking and instructive examples of how we avail ourselves of the tremendous resources of modern science when the peculiarities of the case require it.

ONE of the most delicate tasks ever presented to the criminologist is the detection of art forgeries. Some of the most gigantic swindles in the history of mankind have consisted in passing off bogus antiques.

The scientific laboratory detective has of late frequently been called upon to discover the criminal perpetrator of grave frauds of this character, and has made their successful execution more and more problematical. On this page is the record of a remarkable case of this kind, in which Dr. Van Poitier, of the University of Munich, unravelled the mystery surrounding the purchase of an apparently priceless Etruscan vase.

Dr. Von Poitier discovered that the vase was bogus because the clay was mixed with flour to give it the lightness of ancient clay, and he found that the fraud had been perpetrated by a Russian with six toes on his right foot and numerous artificial warts on his face.

The most celebrated instance of this kind perhaps occurred in 1896, when the Louvre in Paris bought what was called "The Tiara of Saitapharnes," from a Russian dealer of no particular standing. A legion of art connoisseurs and authorities declared the Tiara genuine, and although three authorities, Wesselowsky, Furtwaengler and Boucher held the opposite opinion, the sum of 100,000 francs was paid for the find. Some years later the Russian engraver, Roukhomowsky, confessed that at the request of a man whose name he had forgotten, he had executed and put together a tiara like this description tallied with the tiara known as that of Saitapharnes, and upon further inquiry, Roukhomowski gave a detailed description of the workmanship of the tiara, telling how he had glued the separate parts together and mentioning the books on antique art from which he had copied the design.

Dr. Shapira once concluded a bargain to sell a bogus manuscript of the Bible to the British Museum for $1,000,000, and was only exposed a week before the money was to have been paid.

Egyptian antiques are imitated by the wagon load. Glass imitations of scarabs, figures of idols and jewelry defy detection frequently, and very satisfactory imitations of animal mummies are made of infusorial earth. One genius once manufactured a mummy of an ancient Egyptian Rameses, supposedly of black basalt, from argillite and soapstone from France. One genius also sold oil of ancient Egyptian papyrus as extra for the manufacture of at least half a dozen of spurious rolls. The roll is softened through steaming, and the unrolled papyrus is cut into strips wide enough to cover a piece of wood, fashioned in imitation of the papyrus staff.

Tanagra and Myrrhina figures have been imitated in shoals. Michael Kaufmann, of Rheinzaberg, Germany, for forty years manufactured Roman antiques and sold them at good prices to savants of his own and other countries. His mysterious inscriptions baffled and perplexed Roman scholars. His industry flourished mightily and in all probability he would never have been exposed but for the blunder of placing a mediæval Bavarian visor on a Greek Minerva, and eighteenth century top boots and a perruque upon the head of an emperor, whom he named "Antonius." But many of his "antiques" can to this day be seen in European museums in places of honor, and the volumes of literature written about the puzzling inscriptions can be found in any library.

In Italy, Bohemia and Belgium factories ex at which manufacture only imitations of antique and mediæval glassware. These factories sell the imitations as such, but once the dealer of antiques gets possession of a particularly handsome piece of this work, the frank imitation becomes a genuine antique. Particularly good imitations are made of priceless Millefiori glass, Venetian glass, enamelled German bumpers, Oriental mosque lanterns and mediæval painted glass.

Modern imitations of Italian "old masters" are made to assume the golden brown, mellow tint of age, by treating them with a solution of licorice. Ashes and gum arabic produce an impression of cracks and ruins. Old—indubitably old—canvas upon which was painted a worthless picture, is frequently used for imitation of some "old master."

Art imposition second in importance only to the Sattapharnes fraud occurred in 1876, when Salvatore Fenici painted numerous "objets d'art veera" in the collection of the Duke of Modena, notably enamels, with such success that the case came before the courts and was decided only after months of litigation. The imitations, curiously enough, were in point of fact almost as valuable as the genuine articles.

The Tiara of Saitapharnes, One of the Most Remarkable Examples of Art Forgeries Ever Exposed.

Genuine old Italian marriage coffers, "cassoni"—are carefully studied and the various portions are imitated in putting the case together. The various panels, pilasters, cornices, etc., are distributed among reasonable [illegible] one of the chests is genuine and partially spurious. The clever dealer, by drawing the attention of the purchaser to the genuine side or bid or bottom, is reasonably secure from detection.

Wood can be made to appear old by being soaked or boiled. Genuine worm holes are drilled into the wood and filled with bird manure. Bird feces is a powerful wash [illegible] worm holes are distributed in a manner [illegible] the worm eats his way through wood never eats his way downward, but upward, avoiding the carved portions. Mordacic acid produces artificial rust of iron locks. Vinegar produces artificial verdigris on silver. Ivory receives a deep yellow gloss by being dipped in a solution of tobacco or in permanganate of potash, and Professor Endel tells how an ivory carver soaked ivory in vinegar, to soften it, which facilitated the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] placing it in cold [illegible] The [illegible] made his wife, who was stout, carry it in her bodice near her skin, and as she perspired very freely, the ivory figurine, after a few days, presented a yellow and venerable appearance.

Peruvian pottery imitations were produced in wholesale by one clever workman. Unfortunately he tried to improve on the work of the Incas who represented all of their men as having a tiny wart on the left cheek. A certain jurisdictor, whose esthetic sense was offended by the wart, amputated it in his clever imitations, not knowing that the small protuberance was supposed to be caused by cocoa shell, which the ancient Peruvians chewed incessantly, just as the South Sea Islanders chew the betel nut. The fancied improvement on his model led to his detection and arrest.

The patina, the attractive green incrustation which a bronze acquires with age, presents the chief difficulty for the would-be-imitator of this kind of antique. Formerly artificial patina could be removed with lemon juice, but this test is no longer a dependable one, when the forgery is done by a skilled man.

There are a host of partial imitations or restorations which it is unfair to regard as out and out frauds but which nevertheless materially impair the value of the articles in question as antiquities.

Gross fells of a curious instance illustrating the point. A tinsmith had come into possession of a valuable, genuine old helmet. The helmet consisted of two semi spherical shells, which formerly had had an ear protector attached to each side. The ear protectors were gone, but the riveting remained. The tinsmith desired to "restore" the ear flaps, but finding it too difficult to remove the old rivets, he made another puncture just above the row of old rivet holes for attaching the ear flaps. The fraud would not have been detected if the tinsmith had taken the trouble to properly file and polish the rivets on the inside of the helmet. He failed to do this and the rivets stuck out on the inner surface of the helmet like sore thumbs, so that the wearer of the casque would have been severely and injured every time he wore it.

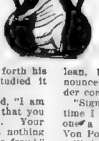
Case S— How Dr. Von Poitier Discovered by Means of a Rusty Nail and a Wart That a Forgery Had Been Substituted for an Ancient and Valuable Etruscan Vase

BARON GRILL had taken up his abode near the Palazzo Rospigliosi in Rome, so that he might every day enjoy looking at Guido Reni's "Aurora." The Baron was a collector himself, and during a visit to Florence bought an Etruscan earthenware vase for 75,000 francs from a dealer by the name of Giulio Bennotto. He was enchanted with his purchase, and invited Dr. Von Poitier, who happened to be at Rome at the time, to be present at the unpacking of the perfect specimen of Etruscan pottery which it had cost him so good buck to happen upon.

Dr. Von Poitier, who was an art connoisseur, expert criminologist as well as [illegible] arrival of the case [illegible] as his friend [illegible] was opened and the vase was lifted out of the wooden box Baron Grill uttered an exclamation of astonishment. A piece [illegible] the surface of the vase, marring the design painted upon it in caustic.



Dr. Von Poitier examined the flaw very carefully, and after a survey with the naked eye, drew forth his pocket microscope and studied it anew.

"My dear Baron," he said, "I am truly sorry to inform you that you have been imposed upon. Your beautiful Etruscan vase is nothing but a counterfeit, a cheat, a fraud."

"Impossible!" exclaimed the Baron. "I have dealt with the man who sold it to me for years, and he has never sold me a spurious piece."

"Who is the dealer?" asked Dr. Von Poitier.

"Giulio Bennotto."

"I know him," said Dr. Von Poitier. "This is curious. As you say, he would not cheat any one. Nevertheless this vase is not an Etruscan vase, but a very clever imitation. When imitators discovered that the antique ware was much lighter than modern ware, they hit upon the brilliant notion of adding flour to the clay in order to diminish the weight, and furthermore, when they discovered that after being baked the pores of the earthenware having an admixture of flour were so conspicuously large as to betray the fact that the ware was not authentic, they further improved their method by covering the flour and clay vase with a very thin layer of sheath made of pure clay. The result was perfect, so perfect that it is almost impossible to distinguish a genuine vase from a spurious one, if the workmanship is good otherwise."

Baron Grill was furious.

"Giulio [illegible] me [illegible] but he shall [illegible]"

Dr. Von [illegible] ed the [illegible] low him to speak. [illegible] art dealer, [illegible] ing to [illegible] or in the Baron's possession [illegible] lean, brown little man was announced, the Baron had himself under control.

"Signor Bennotto, this is the first time I have known you to sell any one a spurious antique," said Dr. Von Poitier.

"You know what that means," he said.

The art dealer whipped a tape measure out of his pocket and began measuring the vase. His face was a picture, with suppressed excitement. He called out suddenly:

"Signor, this is not the vase I sold you. The height is the same, 37 15-16 centimeters. (about twelve inches), the diameter of the orifice is the same, 6 8—centimeters, but its girth is different. My vase, measured around its widest portion, measured precisely the same as its height, a peculiarity which enchanced the value of this piece of pottery. This vase measured ¾ of a centimeter more. It is not the same vase."

"Signor" said Dr. Von Poitier, "it is lucky for you that you are known as an honest man. I want you to answer a few questions. They will help us solve this mystery. Did you pack the vase yourself?"

"Yes," said Giulio Bennotto, without hesitation. Suddenly he exclaimed. "But no, that is not so, Signor. I forgot. I had everything ready to pack the vase, I was going to do it after dinner. Then I felt sick, very sick, and my assistant did it for me."

"This attendant—who is he?"

"I had him for six months," said Bennotto. "A very decent fellow, but so ugly—an eye-sore, Signor."

"In what way?"

Oh, he has warts—such warts, Signor, as you never saw in all your life."

"You say you were ill. In what way?"

"Oh, nothing much, Signor must know that I am troubled with my heart. And the doctor, he had given me some drops to take. On that day, when I meant to pack the vase, I felt very ill after dinner. I felt so ill that I had to send for the doctor, and it seems, signor, that by mistake I had taken two doses of my medicine, and it makes me ill. Curious, silly mistake, eh, signor?"

"Did you drop this medicine into the glass yourself?"

"Yes"

"Do you remember that you dropped an overdose into the glass?"

"No, signor, but it happened often that my attendant—the eye-sore, signor, would say to me: 'Signor Bennotto, have a care. You have already dropped the drops into the glass. Then he would get up and pour away the contents of the glass so that I might not poison myself. A very decent fellow, signor, but an eye sore, because of the warts."

He handed Dr. Poitier a small vial. The doctor opened it and held it to his nostrils.

"Accipm," he said. "And you take two drops as the usual dose. On that day you took an overdose. Your heart began to beat as if it were bursting. The blood seemed to cloud your brain. Your eyes felt strange and hot, and the pupil of the eye became so [illegible] that nothing but a tiny rim could be seen of the iris."

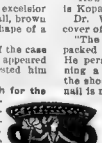
"Yes, yes, signor."

"I went to look at the case in which the vase came," said Dr. Von Poitier.

He went through the excelsior carefully. He found a small, brown body, about the size and shape of a pea.

He examined the cover of the case with a microscope. What appeared to be a rusty nail interested him greatly. Then he said:

"Baron, I can now vouch for the innocence of Signor Bennotto. Signor, your attendant is the famous Russian forger, Kosatsky, who has served time on three different occasions for selling spurious antiques of his own making. Let me tell you what he did.



"Afraid of the police, he sought you out, a comparatively obscure dealer in antiques. Instead of selling 'antiques' which he had himself made direct to [illegible] his plan was now to imitate genuine antiques in your store, and, after palming off on you the imitations, which your excellent reputation for honesty would help you to sell, readily enough and with little danger of detection, he, a little later on could sell the genuine antiques with absolutely no danger whatever.

"To guard against mishaps this man exaggerated his ugly appearance. He made several artificial warts for himself, I found, using common glue and scraped leather. The little brown, pea-like object found was nothing but a wart which had come off while he was working. Then, in order to get out of the way so that he could exchange the genuine and the spurious pottery, he gave you an overdose of atropi"; that is, he dropped a few drops into a glass while you were not looking, and you yourself added another two drops, making an overdose. He had prepared you to expect taking an overdose some day, by continually warning you, and pretending that you had dropped the medicine into the glass twice. Is he still with you?"

"Si, Signor."

Here the Baron interrupted.

"How do you know that this man is Kopatsky?" he asked.

Dr. Von Poitier pointed to the cover of the case.

"The day on which the man packed the vase was a warm day. He perspired freely, and after running a nail into his foot, through the shoe—that brownish stuff on the nail is not rust but blood—he worked on without even a stocking on his foot. Probably he feared blood poisoning. Well, he stood with his bare foot, the left foot, on the inside cover of the case, and he left an impression of the foot.

"This shows that this man had six toes on the left foot. Possibly he has six toes on his left foot, and this evidence, together with the workmanship of the pottery—that is the internal evidence—betray the man's identity."

Dr. Von Poitier asked to have a hot water bag brought him. He held this bag close above the impression, and when he had heated the wood, and consequently the perspiration which had dried upon it, he poured a fluid from a small bottle over it.

"This," he explained, "is nitrate of silver. It is what Forgeot suggests using in such cases. Usually I use hypersulphite of sodium, which is Florence's method, but as I have none of that with me, and have the nitrate of silver, which I am using for my eyes, I am employing that. Now look. You will be able to plainly see the impression now."

Dr. Von Poitier was right. The forger was Kopatsky, and he confessed to having imitated a helmet several Roman coins, an Egyptian scarab and an Etruscan necklace and other articles.

How Hypnotism Has Made a Real "TRILBY" in REAL LIFE

Normally as Tuneless as Du Maurier's Heroine, Miss Graham Sings Like Patti When a Scientific Svengali Robs Her of Self-Consciousness, Doubt, and Fear

The Medical Report on the Real "Trilby"

By Dr. Frank E. Miller.

I NOW present to you Mr. Munter and Miss Graham. Miss Graham has never taken a lesson, but has attended both concert and opera as an auditor. Nothing is known of her range of voice; she has absolutely no knowledge of music, nor does she possess any musicianship. I will now take a disc from the phonograph, which Mr. Munter knows very well, but of which Miss Graham has no knowledge. He will show you how easily he can by his psychic method produce a Melba, with due allowance for psychic disassociation and limitation.

On March 3 I met Miss Graham at the house of Mr. Munter who hypnotized her by direct methods, using eye mastery and occasional brow stroke, both sitting in upright chairs for twenty minutes, until the patient was in profound hypnotic sleep, her head lying relaxed and back on the chair. At this point he began suggesting very quick and deep abdominal breathing with lips closed and nose open, declaring that breath was the power of song. His next step was to say:

"Arise! You always wished to be an opera singer, now you are the greatest singer in the world."

The music box, already adjusted at 76, was started on Mme. Schuman-Heink's record of "The Rosary." The subject with eyes closed arose slowly, with the help of Mr. Munter. In less than thirty seconds she began to sing in a very irregular way, then suddenly straightened up and burst forth with excellent rhythm, into as excellent an imitation of Madame Heink as one could expect.

On consultation with Mr. Munter it was deemed best to bring her out of the hypnotic state and try the subject's voice with something that every one should be familiar with. With several vigorous shakes of her head and the statement that her mother was waiting for her, she opened her eyes slowly and began to laugh heartily. Although every one in the room complimented her, she denied that she had sung—that she knew anything of what she had done, and failed to recognize the songs. After two minutes of interrogation she was asked to sing "Home Sweet Home." Her rendition was so devoid of all the artistic points of the hypnotical reproduction of "The Rosary," wanting in all the requirements of even an ordinary girl's singing, the voice so piping and constrained, that it made all laugh.

On March 7, a meeting was held with Professor Hallock and Dr. Muckey, of Columbia College, in which she sang for many hours under less favorable conditions at first. After an hour she came under complete control and sang excellently seven times.

March 24, she was hypnotized in seventeen minutes and sang almost continuously before several physicians and other folk from 8 p. m. until 1 p. m.

It would seem from this singular and remarkable case that the hypnotic suggestive power of the pedagogue might be given often enough to make her realize by automatism just the necessary organs in union between the psychology and physiology of voice teaching.

How "Trilby" Sang for Me.

By Ada Patterson.

THROUGH the courtesy of Mr. Charles Munter I was invited to a special demonstration of his Svengali-like powers over the dormant voice and singing talent of Miss Marion Graham, the Twentieth Century New York Trilby.

The demonstration occurred at the prosaic hour of noon and amid the imagination-dulling environment of a Thirty-fourth street business office. Incessant Broadway traffic and shrill Sixth avenue whistles provided distractions. There was nothing, either in habit of thought or any previous experience, to predispose me toward belief that anything far from the usual was about to happen.

Mr. Munter, a small man of decided manner, presented his secretary, a tall, wide shouldered, deep chested girl, with strongly marked features, clear, healthily pale skin, and a firm, wel cut mouth. Rather more than ordinarily good looking, there was nothing in her appearance strikingly exceptional save her eyes. Large and deep set, they were in color shading from violet to gray as light fell at various angles upon them. Their pupils, abnormally large, made them look darker. They were eyes of far vision, the eyes of the dreamer. They were of that changeful, half liquid quality that betokens the exceedingly sensitive nature.

Marion Graham told me her story briefly, for it is a brief story. She is a farmer's daughter. With her parents she had lived on an upstate farm until six years ago. When sixteen she came to New York and entered Mr. Munter's employ. She had been of delicate physique, but gradually had grown stronger. Last February she had gone to Dr. Frank E. Miller, the eminent throat specialist and surgeon, physician to most of the grand opera stars. Elsewhere on this page Dr. Miller recounts the history of her case from that time, as he presented it at the convention of the Medical and Laryngological Society last month, when Miss Miller and Mr. Munter gave their curious musical entertainment to five hundred wondering physicians.

To an audience of two, Mr. Munter and myself, Miss Graham sang in the little office a stanza of "Home, Sweet Home." Her voice, sweet but small and wavering, flatted badly, and she stood with arms rigid at her sides, her hand clinched, her shoulders sunken—as hopeless a spectacle for singing purposes as could be conceived.

"Don't be afraid of me," I suggested.

"I'm afraid of everybody," she answered, her pale cheeks flooded with sudden pink. "I have always been shy. When I get on a street car and some one happens to look at me I suffer."

The lifeless effort at singing finished, she took a seat at the end of the long, flat topped desk. Mr. Munter sat in his accustomed place at his desk. A distance of three feet separated them. Mr. Munter sat in an easy, relaxed way in his office chair, Miss Graham, in the same manner, sitting opposite him.

"Tell them to be quiet outside," said the hypnotist to his office boy. "Cut off the telephone connection. I want no interruptions."

Three persons became still. The little office was on the instant an oasis of silence in an ocean of noise. Mr. Munter looked into Miss Graham's eyes. Miss Graham looked back into his. The room became so silent that I could hear the deep, regular breathing of each. No one stirred. It was as though each of the sitting figures had fallen asleep, although their eyes were open.

After eighteen minutes of what seemed an interminable silence, Miss Graham's long, black lashes rested quietly upon her cheeks. The purplish eyelids that had seemed to steadily grow heavier were at last closed.

"Open the windows wide," Mr. Munter called to the office boy waiting outside, and currents of air from three directions swept around us.

"Now breath deeply," he said to the sleeping girl. With childlike readiness she obeyed, packing her lungs with deep draughts of the cool air.

A music box was brought in. Patti's record of "Home, Sweet Home" was placed in it.

"Stand and sing." At the low spoken command the girl with the fast-closed eyes rose. To the accompaniment of the music box she burst into song. In her moments of slumber, her voice had developed great volume. Her tones were as big as Patti's, as rich, as musical, as true, and more youthful, fresher. The contrast between this and her former timid rendition was as a violin solo by a master compared with the tin pan drumming of a boy infesting a kitchen.

She sang "The Rosary" with the same accuracy and power. With dramatic suddenness she changed to the "I Love Love" solo from "Naughty Marietta," perfectly following the lead of the music box, dancing with girlish abandon and in perfect rhythm with the music. She sang an aria from "Pagliacci" with the same perfect melody, in absolute accord with the instrument, and with appropriate and unschooled gestures. Only once in an hour's demonstration, did the strange power seem to desert her. Mr. Munter's attention was distracted by a noise in the hall.

"I told you to guard us against interruptions," he called to the boy without. His vexation seemed to be communicated to his subject. She shrugged her shoulders turned angrily away, started toward the door. He followed and placed his fingers on her arm.

"It's all right," he said. "Come back and sing."

She returned, and her voice rang out as splendidly fresh and true as before. Once she gasped and her head fell backward. Mr. Munter supported her.

"Open the windows wider," he called to the boy. "Breathe deep," he said to his subject.

She could have sung for four hours. One was enough for conviction that this was a marvellous instance of the power of suggestion. I announced myself convinced.

"Wait," said Mr. Munter. "Let me show you the oneness of subject and operator." He struck his finger sharply against the edge of the table and exclaimed in pain. The girl sobbed piteously. He smiled and walked toward her.

"It's all right," he said, "That was only fun." She laughed in immense relief.

"Now," said he in a calm, everyday tone, "wake up."

The lids quivered for an instant over the closed eyes. They lifted. She looked into the eyes of the demonstrator and smiled as a child smiles after a healthful sleep.

"I feel all right," said the awakened Trilby, in her former conversational tone, "just as though I had been asleep. What did I do?"

I told her, and she looked doubtingly at me. "If that is really true," she said, "I wish I could do it when I am awake."

"Dr. Miller says it may be the bridge by which you will cross into self confidence," I said.

She looked at me in an uncomprehending way and smiled in the constrained manner of the habitually repressed nature.

Trilby had vanished. The shy, routine-dulled secretary had returned.

This diagram illustrates how psychology explains the real Trilby. A—Is the centre of conscious thought. B—The motor centre by which muscular movements are controlled. C—Is the centre of hearing. E. and D—The nervous control of the throat and mouth muscles. By means of hypnotic suggestion the conscious centre is "short circuited," preventing it from disturbing by lack of confidence and other "inhibitions" the perfect muscular action of the tone producing mechanism in head and throat.

"Once she gasped and her head fell backwards. Mr. Munter supported her. 'Open the windows wider,' he said. She could have sung for four hours."

The Explanation

By a Psychologist.

BY means of hypnotic suggestion Mr. Munter was able to "short circuit" Miss Graham's mental apparatus, cutting out consciousness of everything else and enabling her to focus all her psychic, mental and vocal powers upon the ideal rendition of her song. That is my explanation of the phenomenon.

Self consciousness, embarrassment, fear, lack of confidence—a hundred inhibiting thoughts dissipated the vastly larger part of her mental energy, which necessarily limited her vocal power.

The hypnotic suggestion applied by Mr. Munter diverted all this waste energy into the desired channel, enabling Miss Graham to concentrate all her powers on the song, to realize her singing ideal. It is conceivable that, gradually, in a subject like Miss Graham the concentration gained under hypnotic suggestion can be carried over into the conscious state, the advantage of which is obvious.

From the purely physiological standpoint, four elements enter into voice production. They are impulse, inhibition, the vaso motor nerves and [illegible]. Translated into more popular terms this means that there must be the impulse—that is, the desire to sing—[illegible] sustained [illegible] of [illegible] vocal, and, [illegible] voice sound [illegible] voice, all [illegible] vocal cords [illegible] like with a [illegible] its placed upon [illegible] exact exercise of will [illegible].

In the case of Miss Marion [illegible] surprise, a strong [illegible] which she said was [illegible] her life. Nutrition was sufficient [illegible] has a fairly well [illegible] with a sufficiently [illegible] the muscles, save for the [illegible] of the tonsils, which can be [illegible] in good condition. She suffered from inhibition. The restrictions of her life and the limitations of her surroundings forbade her to hope that she [illegible] ever become a great singer.

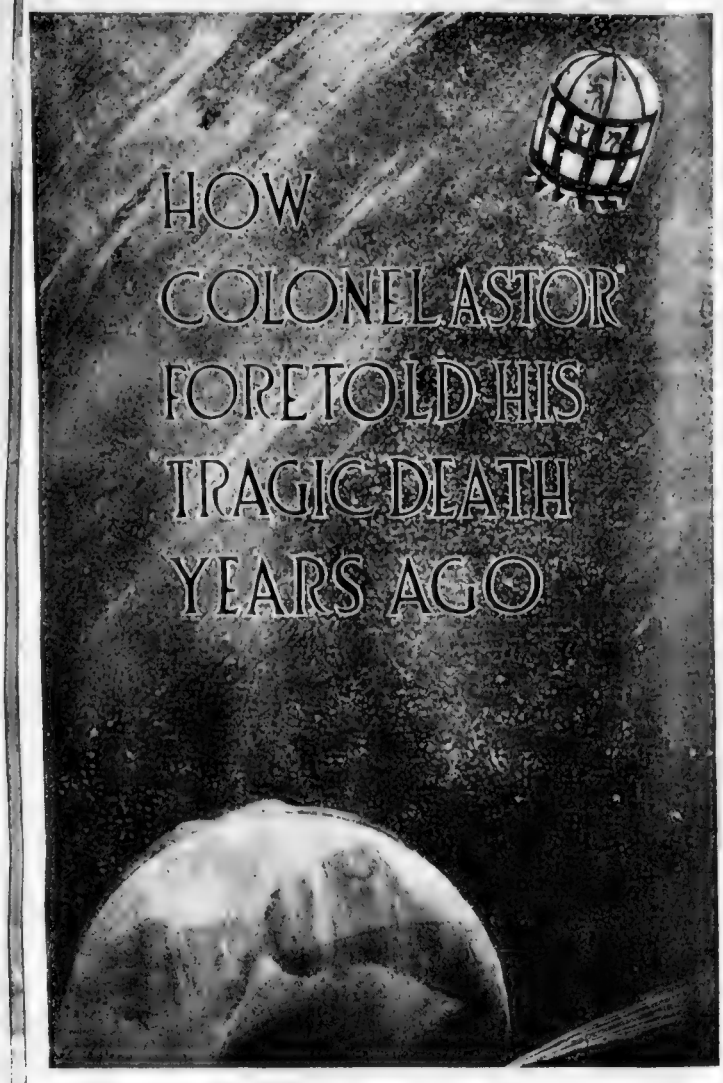
Remarkable Passages in a Book Written for His Friends by the Titanic's Hero Which Seem to Foreshadow Not Only the Manner of His Own Death, but Also His Marriage to Madeleine Force



The "Callisto" Leaving Earth. The Beginning of Colonel Astor's Journey to Other Worlds.

AS his intimate friends well knew, there were several sides to the character of the late Colonel John Jacob Astor—man of imagination, seer, prophet, scientist, inventor, besides his intensely human character.

This versatility of mind and temperament is strikingly shown in a book which he wrote and published twenty years ago for private circulation among his friends, under the title, "A Journey in Other Worlds—A Romance of the Future."

In this book Colonel Astor represented himself in three distinct personalities—as Ayrault, a young man of imagination and much spirituality; as Dr. Cortlandt, a scientist of the ideal type, and as Colonel Bearwarden, an engineering genius of the year 2000, which is the period represented in the narrative. The united gifts of these three geniuses enable them to visit the planets of Jupiter and Saturn, by means of a force called "apergy," which is the counterpart of gravitation.

In spite of the scientific knowledge and mechanical ingenuity displayed by the author, the volume makes it apparent that possession of great wealth and a material way of living could not overcome Colonel Astor's strong spiritualistic tendencies that he firmly believed in a future life and was in a perpetual state of inquiry concerning it.

The astonishing feature of the book is that it not only, more or less accurately, describes his own death—as violent as that which he actually met in the Titanic disaster—and his funeral, but describes a vision of his future wife; and that description does not fit his first wife at all, but supplies a surprisingly correct image of his young widow, who was Miss Madeleine Force.

On this page is given a resume of that portion of Colonel Astor's book devoted to his imaginary experiences on the planet Saturn, and which represents him in his character of a spiritually-minded man, as seer, prophet.

PASSING through the nebulous rings of Saturn untouched, the interplanetary ship, Callisto, [illegible] the store of apergetic force, landed lightly on the surface of that planet, about ten degrees from its equator. Its three passengers (representing Colonel Astor in his three personalities as scientist, engineer and seer) emerged from their hermetically sealed ship into an atmosphere slightly denser than that of the earth, and a temperature [illegible] than ten degrees above freezing.

Almost immediately they felt themselves to be in the presence of the supernatural. Immense toadstools disappeared while they gazed upon them. Gigantic, beautiful lilies, honey laden, attracted birds, not by their perfume, but by uttering sweetly musical tones.

"All about them they heard a curious humming, as that of bees, or like the murmuring of prayers in a resonant cathedral."

They came upon a block of mica which they easily split into thin sheets. While they gazed upon one of these sheets a cloud passed over it and a pencil which Ayrault had laid down, held by an unseen hand, wrote in Latin the phrase:

"'Absorpta est mors in victoria.'

Gentlemen,' began Bearwarden, as if addressing a meeting, 'this cannot be coincidence; we are undoubtedly and unquestionably in the presence of a spirit or of several spirits. That they understand Latin we see; and from what they say, they may have known death.'

"'It is perfectly reasonable,' said Ayrault, 'to conclude it was a spirit, if we may assume that spirits have the power to move the pencil, which is a material object. Nobody doubts nowadays that after death we live again. I wish the spirit would reveal itself in some other way.'

"As he finished speaking the rays of the distant and cold-looking sun were split, and the colors of the spectrum danced upon the table as if obtained by a prism. In astonishment they rose and looked at the table, when suddenly a shadow appeared which no one recognized as his own. Tracing its source, their eyes met those of an old man with a white robe and a beard and a look of great intelligence on his calm face.

"'Greetings and congratulations,' he said. 'Man has steadfastly striven to rise, and we see the results in you.'

"'What were the strange shadows and prismatic colors that kept passing across our table?' asked Bearwarden.

"They were the obstructions and refractions of light caused by spirits trying to take shape,' replied the shade.

"'Then,' said Cortlandt, 'how is it that, of the several spirits that tried to become embodied, we see but one, namely, you?'

"'That,' said the shade, 'is because no natural law is broken. On earth one man can learn a handicraft better in a few days than another in a month, while some can solve with ease a mathematical problem that others could never grasp. So it is here. Perhaps I was in a favorable frame of mind on dying, for the so-called supernatural always interested me on earth, or I had a natural aptitude for these things; for soon after death I was able to affect the senses of the friends I had left.'

"'Are we to understand, then,' asked Cortlandt, 'that the reason more of our departed do not appear to us is because they cannot?'

"'Precisely,' said the shade. 'But, though the percentage of those that can return and reappear on earth is small, their number is fairly large. History has many cases. We know that the prophet Samuel raised the witch of Endor at the behest of Saul, that Moses and Elias became visible in the transfiguration, and that after his crucifixion and burial Christ returned to his disciples, and was seen and heard by many others.'"

The voyagers to Saturn learn from the shade—who tells them that, upon earth half a century ago he was an American Bishop—that they are visiting the abode of souls prior to their eternal destination following the Day of Judgment—except those already eternally doomed, who are kept upon Cassandra. Bodiless, freed from material ills and needs, growing constantly in knowledge and prescience, they are far from being unhappy.

The shade tells them that there is practically no limit to human progress on earth, which depends on command of the forces of nature. For example, man can cause new continents to appear out of the ocean.

"By lowering large quantities of high powered explosives to the deepest parts of the ocean bed, and exploding them there, you can produce chasms through which some water will be forced toward the heated interior by the enormous pressure of its own weight. At a comparatively slight depth it will be converted into steam and produce an earthquake. This will so enlarge your chasm that a great volume of water will rush into the redhot interior, which will cause a series of such terrific eruptions that large islands will be upheaved. . . . To attain a much higher civilization, you must break water up chemically and use its constituent gases.'

"'Force superheated steam,' replied the spirit, 'through an intensely heated substance, as you now do in making water-gas—preferably platinum heated by electricity—apply an apergetic shock, and the oxygen and hydrogen will separate like oil and water, the oxygen being so much the heavier. Lead them in different directions as fast as the water is decomposed—otherwise they would reunite—and your supply of power will be inexhaustible.'"

In his personality of Ayrault, the spiritually-minded voyager, Colonel Astor, wins special privileges from the spirit. Though the book was written twenty years ago, one scene between them reveals in the multi-millionaire astonishing insight into the future. He begs of the spirit a vision of the woman he will love and marry and obtains his desire. He describes her thus:

"A lovely girl, with blue eyes, brown hair and perfect figure, clear, white skin and just twenty."

This is not at all a description of the first Mrs. John Jacob Astor; but at every point descriptive of Madeleine Force, who, at the age of twenty, married Colonel Astor.

Ayrault is so deeply enamored of the girl of his vision that the departure from Saturn for the earth is hastened, so eager is he to win her for his wife.

The whole world is familiar with Colonel Astor's sacrifice of self in the Titanic disaster; how he assisted his bride of less than a year, and many other women into the lifeboats, and, when all had been launched, calmly stood back and awaited his own cruel death. In the course of the voyagers' questionings of the spirit, Bearwarden asks:

"Is there no way by which a man may retrieve himself, if he has lost or misused his opportunities on earth?'

"'The way a man lays up treasures in heaven, when on earth,' replied the spirit, 'is by gladly doing something for some one else, usually in some form sacrificing self.'"

Both his spiritual and scientific sides are represented in this information from the spirit.

"'A feature of the spiritual world is, that it does not interfere with the natural, and the natural except through faith, is not aware of its presence.'"

Now comes the most marvelous scene in the book in which Colonel Astor foretells, twenty years in advance, virtually the manner of his death and the details of his funeral. In the character of Cortlandt, eldest of the three voyagers, he asks the spirit to give him a vision of his end.

"'I will transfer to you my sentient prescience,' said the spirit, 'that you may foresee as prophets have. In so doing I shall but anticipate, since you will yourselves in time obtain this sense in a greater or less degree.'

"'Your death will be brought about by accident. Some daybreak will find you weak, after a troubled night, with your bodily resources at low ebb. Sunset will see you weaker, with your power of resistance almost gone. Midnight will find you weaker still, and but little removed from the point of death.'"

The evidence disclosed when Colonel Astor's body was recovered verified this prophecy in detail. The cause of death was the accident of the destruction of the Titanic. It was at once plain that Colonel Astor was not drowned. There was no water in his lungs. The life belt held his head well above the surface of the calm sea. Hour after hour he floated about in the icy water, growing colder and weaker as his powers of resistance were sapped. With, finally, his bodily resources at a low ebb," he died.

Then the spirit gave the voyagers a vision of the funeral. In a description which the book describes almost in detail the funeral of Colonel Astor. There is the "last earthly journey"—from Italian Hall, New York, and up the "broad river" to Rhinebeck. The reading service and the hymns are accurately stated. The burial at the family vault, with the Hudson flowing nearby, could not be more appropriate for any other.

It will be remembered that Colonel Astor's body was so bruised by floating ice cakes that it had to be identified at once. Thus the voyagers saw in this vision:

"'Oh, my faith!' cried Cortlandt, 'I see my face within, yet it is but a decomposing mass that I once described as I.'"

"Then came a sweeping change of scene. A host of monuments and granite stones reflected the sunlight, while a broad river ebbed and flowed between high banks. A sexton and a watcher stood by a granite vault, which they opened with a large key. . . . Presently a funeral procession appeared. The hearse stopped before the open vault, over the door of which stood the name of 'CORTLANDT.'"

Ayrault—Colonel Astor's spiritual personality in the book—prevails upon the spirits to empower his soul to leave his body and journey to earth, where it joins the family ancestors [illegible] the souls of its ancestors. [illegible] Saturn and being reembodied by the spirit, he is told:

"'Some of your ancestors are on Sandra (the [illegible] hope as soon and others [illegible] pursuing their [illegible] though a few family felt [illegible] none were able to return and [illegible] side their graves. It was a [illegible] and prayer that He [illegible] spirit, but you see how unhappy it [illegible] you.'

"'I see,' replied Ayrault, 'that no one should wish to anticipate the work of the Almighty.'"

Dragons, Giant Singi

IN his book Colonel Astor not only wrote a startlingly true prophecy of the manner in which he was to die, but described some very weird adventures experienced during imaginary visits to the planets Jupiter and Saturn.

Actually the whole scheme of the book is prophetic—prophetic regarding himself and regarding the earth as it is to be. Already, in the year 2000—the period of the narrative—science is accomplishing the "straightening" of the earth's axis, that is, bringing it perpendicular to the plane of its orbit, so that the sun's rays light it from pole to pole at all seasons and bring perpetual Spring to the temperate zones. This is done by means of a newly discovered force, which enables man alternately to increase and lessen the weight of the land and water at either pole.

officeholder, except members of the Cabinet, "retains his office while efficiently performing his duty, without regard to politics. The President can also be re-elected any number of times."

Regarding the negative gravity force called "apergy," by means of which the earth's axis is switched from twenty-three and a half degrees to right angles to the orbit's plane, and which propelled the Callisto and its three passengers to Jupiter and Saturn and back to earth, Colonel Astor in his book gives it divine origin—like all other natural forces.

We know that Christ, while walking on the waves, did not sink, and that Ho and Elijah were carried up into heaven. What became of their material bodies we cannot tell, but they were certainly superior to gravitation."

The Callisto, hermetically sealed, its passengers provided with air chemically manufactured as needed, started for the planet Jupiter at the season when its mean opposition distance was 380,000,000 miles from the earth. The Callisto's speed was as nearly a million miles per hour that four hundred hours sufficed for the journey.

Arriving within two million miles of the planet, feeling the attraction, they prepared to check the Callisto's speed.

"By 7 a. m., according to Eastern standard time, they were but fifty thousand miles from Jupiter's surface, the gigantic globe filling nearly one side of the sky. In preparation for a sally, they got their guns and accoutrements ready . . .

"They saw they should alight on a longitude on which the sun had just risen, the rocky tops of the great mountains shining like helmets in its rays. Soon they felt a sharp checking of their forward motion, and saw, from the changed appearance of the stars and sun, that they had entered the atmosphere of their new home.

"Not even did Columbus, standing at the prow of the Santa Maria, with the New World before him, feel the exultation and delight experienced by these latter-day explorers of the twenty-first century.

"'Since Jupiter's axis is almost at right angles to the plane of its orbit,' said the doctor, 'it will be possible for us to have any climate we wish, from constantly warm at the equator to constantly cool or cold as we approach the poles.'

So they steered for a point about a degree and a half north of the equator. Being now in the planet's envelope of atmosphere, objects began to have a homelike look. The five moons, which, while the voyagers were outside of Jupiter's atmosphere, resembled silver shields against a black sky, were now barely visible. They grounded the Callisto on a firm strip of land between the forest and an arm of the sea and, opening a port, discovered that the atmosphere was only slightly denser than that of the earth. They disembarked, each well armed, and looked about them.

The size of curious tracks in the moist earth, and the huge ferns scattered about, indicated that Jupiter was passing through a carboniferous period.

"'I never believed in the theory,' said Dr. Cortlandt, 'that the larger the planet, the smaller would be its inhabitants.' And presently they came upon huge bones, evidently the remains of some saurian many times the size of a grown crocodile.

"The first living creatures they saw were sacklike objects, the tops of which swelled visibly, then suddenly collapsed, when the strange creatures rose in the air and sailed forward some forty yards and alighting, repeated the manœuvre. 'You see,' said Cortlandt, 'this vertebrate—for that is as definitely as we can describe it—forces a great pressure of air into its head and neck, which, by the action of valves, it must allow to rush into its very rudimentary lower extremities, distending them with such violence that the body is shot upward and forward.'

"As the Jovian day and night are of equal length at all seasons, and of only five hours each, the voyagers soon witnessed the astonishing phenomenon of flowers singing their evening song to attract birds and insects, instead of by perfume and honey, to entice and scatter their pollen. Later they found that certain of these singing flowers were carnivorous, destroying and devouring the birds lured by their song. Thereafter, until their departure for Saturn, described on another page, with an account of their adventures there—the voyagers had no lack of startling experiences.

"With their guns, carrying explosive bullets, they were able to kill an enormous mastodon. While they roasted and ate portions of its heart, pterodactyls hovered near the tree carcass, eager to [illegible] in the evening a [illegible] turned out to be [illegible]

"Why You Should Make Your Own Fashions."

Lady Duff-Gordon Discusses the Importance of Studying Your Own Individuality and Dressing Accordingly---Some New Summer Gowns

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

NOW that there is a lull between seasons—Spring's end and Summer's dawn — I would like to talk to you a bit about the importance of making your own fashions. By that I mean the importance of studying yourselves, what looks best on you, what lines are best suited to bring out your best. When you have really found that out, then adapt the fashions [illegible] styles and your discretion.

That is the reason I would like to really [illegible] every woman—the necessity of [illegible] the fashions to herself and not herself to the fashions. Take [illegible] the intelligent thing and [illegible] it is where it belongs, as [illegible] woman's loveliness, [illegible] slavish follow-the-sheep way and makes the frame everything. And this is not only bad taste, but bad dressing.

The pannier skirts are a good example. I think the pannier is a very charming mode. But it all depends upon who wears it and how it is worn whether it shall be charming or grotesque. It is an individual fashion. That is its first danger.

A fashion that is in itself marked and unusual should be studied carefully. If a woman has a pronounced individuality of her own she runs more danger in wearing an individual fashion, unless she studies it carefully, than any other woman, because two pronounced individualities are apt to clash. One of Ruben's women would not look well in a pannier, but one of Watteau's dainty Marquisses or shepherdesses de luxe would. On the other hand, a woman who would not look well in, what I call a normal pannier skirt, might look very well in a modification of it. And there are some women who under no circumstances, should wear a pannier.

If fashion decreed that every woman should wear a red hat, think of the many women whose complexion, the color of their skin, the color of their eyes and hair, would make them look perfectly grotesque in red hats! Why, then, should these women wear such hats, even if fashion should decree it?

To slavishly follow any fixed uniform mode either in the shape the arrangement, or the color of a gown, is just as bad as the red hats.

I have later on to make a full article upon taste and the importance of studying your own fashions, but this will do for a beginning. I will now describe the gowns on this page.

The beautiful picture gown of which I am sending you a photograph is of shot, ribbed ninon in green and brown. The fichu and apron are of cream old world embroidery. The sash is made of soft striped muslin pompadour pattern bound with faded mauve.

Hat of fine white crinoline with bow and ends hanging down the back of mauve ribbon with black pilot edge and a bunch of pale yellow and silk flowers at side. Lined underneath with same muslin as sash. The parasol is of the new pagoda shape and is of white taffeta with a deep band of the fancy muslin which forms the sash and lines the hat and is finished with a little ruche of mauve ribbon.

The two afternoon gowns shown in the other photograph will next be described. The one on the left is of mauve foulard. The back of the skirt is exceedingly pretty being very softly draped and just expresses the pannier effect low down on the hips. The bodice has the long sloping shoulders with slightly puffed sleeves put in below the shoulder and ending at the elbow with a soft ruche of lace

The collar is of hand embroidered voile. Worn with it is a hat of cream straw, draped in cream lace with black ribbon around the crown, with one long streamer hanging from the back and a beautiful La France rose resting on the brim.

The other gown shown in the picture is made of deep flounced tambour lace edged with soft pink satin and trimmed with rosettes of same. The chief feature of this costume, however, is the mauve taffeta coat worn with it. It has swallow tails, the seams are piped and the edge trimmed with beautifully made ruches of the silk.

Another very smart afternoon gown is shown in one of the sketches. It is of apricot soft silk faille. The tunic is made to stand away from the long, straight underskirt and the revers show a lining of gold and mauve lace. The bodice at the waist is carried out with the same effect and falls over a belt of the same mauve and gold lace. The neck is finished with a tiny collar of mauve satin. The sleeves are long and straight in keeping with the present-day fashion, and fall over the hand with a tiny turnedback cuff of the same mauve satin. The other hat is of mauve satin with bow of dull orange-colored velvet

In the other sketch is shown a white satin evening gown with overdress of white chiffon with bolero effect in front of the bodice embellished with pearls and diamonds. A tiny band of white satin finishes the neck and there is a soft drapery of white chiffon around the waist with long ends. The skirt expresses the pannier idea and is long and draping.

"Jack and the Beanstalk," as pantomime popularity and fame, will have a rival this season in many a fashionable "Jill" with a "beanstalk" of blossoms uprising from her straw hat, this aspiring arrangement being the very latest millinerial mode. And it is one of the smartest, too, for it permits of a blending of any number of beautiful flowers and colors, which if disposed in the ordinary way would almost cover even a goodly sized hat, whereas in the form of this tall, tapering "clump" they leave quite unbroken the lovely "line," which is the distinctive feature of the new shapes, the resulting effect being of that extreme simplicity which is almost daring and altogether delightful.

These massed blossoms are for the most part placed rather toward the back of the hat, at one side, and not even one bud or leaf is permitted to stray onto the front, and absolutely untrimmed part, a very similar scheme being carried out, too, when feathers are the chosen form of adornment. One of the latest and largest models in fine black pedal straw has its wide brim upturned high along the left side, and, then sweeping low down at the right where there consequently comes into full view an ostrich feather of glorious cerise coloring, which is so placed against the crown that its drooping "Lancered" ends make a background for the whole curve of the black straw. Beyond this plume there is nothing—not even an ornament or a bow to fasten and thus off the feather, whose stem is just hidden at the base by a few soft featherey strands being drawn across it

And the result is that, while this hat can be quite correctly and effectively worn with even a plain tailor suit, it will also afford a perfect completion for an afternoon gown of charmeuse or taffetas, whereas its predecessors in the way of bejeweled models were definitely restricted to wear with elaborate toilettes. So thus are the advantages of the present favor for simplicity once more proclaimed and proved.

The Trouble with Graham MUFFINS and CORN BREAD

WHY is it that graham muffins do not taste as they used to?

Why is corn bread so pale in color and flavorless nowadays? Why is it that buckwheat cakes are not good any more?

There is a reason in every case, and it is chiefly because the flour mills are using a different method to produce the flour. Formerly graham flour was produced by grinding the whole wheat without extracting any part of it, thereby insuring the flavor, the color and the nutritious quality that made the product so highly prized a few years ago. But nowadays the mills separate this flour in the grinding, using the richest part of it in the manufacture of high-grade white flour, and only what is left is used for graham. In place of the good flour which the millers take away one of the vital elements of corn meal, removing from it the very foundation of the old-fashioned cornbread our mothers used to make. By this scheme the millers, in order to get more profits, have robbed the corn of its consistency and flavor.

Why OLD METHODS Were BEST

Buckwheat flour has fallen below its old standard because it is not any longer real buckwheat flour. Some of those who get up the "self-rising buckwheat flour" mix with the genuine buckwheat a large amount of other flour of grade, such as corn flour. And this adulterated article is not nearly as good as the old-fashioned although buckwheat flour. Some manufacturers of this prepared stuff make it up well in advance, and as a result it does not reach the market until a year or so after the buckwheat crop has been harvested—and consequently it is not as fresh as it ought to be used as a separate commodity. It is known as "brewer's grit," and finds a ready sale wherever beer is manufactured. This grit takes the place of barley in the making of beer, and is so much cheaper that the demand for it is fully equal to the supply. Its conversion to this use, however, does away one of the vital elements of corn meal, removing from it the very foundation of the old-fashioned cornbread our mothers used to make. "A simple device to prevent particles of egg or cream from flying about while beating."

A Valuable Kitchen Help

WHEN beating eggs or whipping cream small particles are frequently greatly disturbed because, even with the greatest of care, particles of egg or cream will fly about the table and on the floor

It is such a simple matter to avoid all this trouble that it is a wonder every housekeeper has not thought of it herself, and perhaps many have, but for the benefit of those who have not, let me explain: Take a piece of linen paper, writing paper preferred, and cut it across until it is about 6 inches square, there will be four flaps. Pull the paper down over the middle of the egg beater and let it rest upon the bowl, as in the illustration, and there will be no waste and no flying particles to soil the table and floor and utensils.

How to WORK While SITTING

It is possible to perform many household tasks while sitting down. Making a cake, whipping cream, preparing vegetables, ironing small articles and a hundred other occupations can be done in this way, if the kitchen boasts a stool of convenient height to the work-table and sink. A strong stool can be bought for $2, and will save many hours of aching feet before a year has passed.

Whereas cake and pie time should be kept near the cooking table, frying pans, kettles and stock-pots be hung by the stove with the long handled forks, spoons and whisks needed in meat, sauce and soup cookery. Again, open shelving may be adopted: It will be found advantageous to cover one shelf near the

The Massacre of the Albatross

How the U.S. Government Caught the Cruel Japanese Poachers Just in time to Keep them from Exterminating the Birds Made Famous by Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner."

By Rene Bache.

And I had done a hellish thing,
And it would work 'em woe
"Ah, wretch!" said they, "the bird to slay
That made the breeze to blow!"
—The Ancient Mariner

THAT women of fashion may adorn their headgear with the beautiful wings of the albatross to the great profit of Japanese poachers, those birds have been tortured to death by tens of thousands recently on Pacific islands belonging to the United States.

The scene of this ruthless act, so often rebuked in "The Ancient Mariner," is our greatest national bird reservation on Laysan Island and adjoining reefs and islets not far from the Hawaiian group. The little archipelago being uninhabited, the Japanese poachers landed there, and for several months made a business of wiping out the feathered population for the benefit of the milliners and their fashionable patrons.

They killed more than 250,000 albatrosses and other birds—cutting the wings from many of the albatrosses without taking the trouble to kill them, and starving thousands more to death in a dry cistern in order that the fatty tissue next the skin might be absorbed, thus making less cleaning necessary in preparing the pelts for sale.

Incidentally, the marauders made on the spot immense numbers of cages of bamboo, in which they carried off thousands of finches and other small song and cage birds to Japan. Their intention was to stay until they had killed or stolen all the birds there were, but they were at length discovered by the revenue cutter Thistle, arrested and carried to Honolulu.

It should be realized that Laysan Island is the world's principal breeding ground for albatrosses. It is also used as a breeding ground, together with a number of neighboring islets and reefs, by many other species of birds. The importance of protecting it against the repredations of plume-hunters, egg-gatherers and other poachers is hardly to be overestimated; and it was with this idea in view that the United States Government a little more than three years ago issued a proclamation setting aside these bits of terra firma as a national preserve, to be known as the Hawaiian Islands Reservation.

During most of the year the islands, surrounded as they are by dangerous reefs, are unapproachable; but during late Spring and early Summer, when the birds are nesting and rearing their young, a safe landing may be effected in boats. For ages past the reefs and islets composing the reservation have been a favorite resort for sea fowl, affording as they do excellent nesting sites and abundant food for millions of the feathered creatures. Although so much disturbed within recent years, the latter are mostly as tame as farmyard poultry.

To-day, according to an estimate made by the scientists of the expedition, there are about 180,000 albatrosses left on Laysan Island—though this is only about one-sixth of the original colony as it was twenty years or more ago. If the birds are left to themselves and further depredations can be prevented, they will doubtless repair this loss—as will likewise the other feathered species within the limits of the reservation—and continue to live as they did for thousands of years before civilized man intruded upon their beautiful avian world.

The scientific expedition was organized by the Biological Survey in co-operation with the State University of Iowa, and an incidental object in view was to collect specimens of the birds, their nests, eggs and the necessary accessories for preparing a large panoramic group for the university. This group, helped out by realistic surroundings and an artistically painted background, will present to the eye a picture so realistic that the observer might well imagine himself actually on Laysan Island—the various species of sea fowl being shown in the foreground, dancing, rearing their young and otherwise engaged as in life.

All of the old main rookery, where the albatrosses ten years ago were numbered by hundreds of thousands, has been entirely destroyed. Over those areas where formerly they were most abundant only piles of bones remain. The poachers killed the helpless creatures with clubs, and threw the wings and feathers into cars, running along an old track formerly used by a guano company, heaping the bodies up along the sides of the track as they worked.

In an open guano shed were found thousands of albatross wings which had been placed there for shipping, but never cured or removed, for the reason that the marauders were interrupted in their task of extermination. There were many birds with broken legs. Killing clubs, nets and other implements used by the poachers were lying all about.

Not content with killing and skinning the larger species, they caught and caged the finches, honey eaters and miller birds. The Laysan finch is a fine songster, and makes an excellent cage bird. The Laysan Island is an ideal place for it; but (say the naturalists) should any one be rash enough to introduce it into civilized parts it would soon rival the English sparrow as a pest.

The poachers killed a great many of the gorgeous red-tailed tropic birds, but several hundreds of these are left. They have by far the most beautiful plumage of any of the feathered creatures found within the limits of the reservation. With beaks of bright coral red, very long central tail feathers and rose-tinted satin bodies, their appearance is striking.

On Laysan Island and the smaller islets and reefs of the reservation there are many species of birds besides those which have been mentioned. But by far the most important is the albatross, renowned in song and story, which here finds its principal breeding ground and refuge. The idea that bad luck pursues anybody who kills this fowl of good omen is widely accepted by seafaring men everywhere, and upon it is based Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner"—perhaps the weirdest and most impressively grewsome poem ever written.

Official game wardens will be established in permanent residence on Laysan Island, to guard against further depredations. Provision has already been made for periodical visits to it in the Summer time by a revenue cutter. Accordingly, it may reasonably be expected that the safety of the birds from this time on will not be seriously threatened.

Keep at Your Work, and It Will Keep You

Keep Away from the "Let Well Enough Alone" Crowd. Old "Well Enough" Is the General of Calamity, Disaster and Disappointment. There Is no Such Thing as "Well Enough." No Matter How Good a Thing Is, Work to Make It Better. For That You Were Put Here.

IT is true, strange and sad that you hear all of the FOOLISH things very often — and so rarely hear the wise things.

Everybody has heard repeated over and over and expounded solemnly the foolish saying, "Let well enough alone."

This editorial, with the picture of old MR. WELL ENOUGH, is intended to counteract some of the harmful talk about being satisfied with little.

Never be SATISFIED with anything. And don't teach your children to be satisfied—keep their minds free from the dull, discouraging talk about "well enough."

To be satisfied, contented, approving yourself and approving conditions, is a sign of smallness.

Men become great because they are not satisfied, because the more they get of knowledge, wealth or power the more they strive to get.

Columbus was not satisfied with the long sea voyage to India—although others had been satisfied for centuries. And because he was not satisfied Columbus discovered America.

Galileo, Copernicus, Kepler, Newton were not satisfied with the fairy stories about a flat earth and all the hosts of heaven revolving around our miserable little planet. And because they were DISSATISFIED they gave us our wonderful knowledge of astronomy and our glimpse into the infinite—the greatest thing that we possess.

* * *

The inhabitants of this country in 1776 were not satisfied. The Tories, the friends of King George and the English Government, advised the people of the United States to let well enough alone. The Tories reminded the American colonists that England would protect them, England would make them great, England would do everything.

But the colonists were not satisfied to be taxed without representation, and because they were dissatisfied this country is a nation instead of being, like Canada, a colony governed from across the sea.

* * *

Dissatisfaction is the only great motive power in individual life, in national life, in commerce, in politics.

Millions of years ago the creatures that inhabited the ocean, the only living things on this planet, got dissatisfied and crawled up on the land—hideous serpents and lizards—dreadful things to look at they were at first. BUT, LUCKILY, THEY WERE DISSATISFIED.

Some of them became birds and learned to fly.

Some developed wings with hooked joints and gave us the bats and all the pterodactyl family. Others developed into mammals, and moved all over the face of the world, and eventually man appeared in his turn to begin his long career.

He appeared because the wisdom of Nature had transplanted dissatisfaction, struggle and ceaseless effort throughout all animal life.

And man from his first day began HIS career of dissatisfaction and struggle. Because he was dissatisfied and because he would never consent to let well enough alone, he struggled through the stone age, and the age of bronze and the various primitive ages of ignorance, brutality, superstition and cruelty to his present degree of partial civilization.

And because man is and always will be dissatisfied, his growth will continue until he shall develop into a race worthy of this planet, worthy of the wonderful possibilities that the human race inherits.

* * *

Never let well enough alone. You might as well be dead as contented. You were put here to work for yourself and for others, and especially for those that are to come after you. The man who is letting well enough alone and not trying to do better might as well be off the earth and give his place to some one willing to work. He does not deserve the noble work done here BY THE DISSATISFIED before he was born.

Only when man is very old, when his life is practically all behind him, has he the right to rest and think and, having finished his days, look back on the past. And even then, on the last day of his last year, the right kind of man will preach wise dissatisfaction and ambition to the young and go into his grave dissatisfied with himself for not having done better.

* * *

We might all be using hieroglyphics now. But dissatisfaction gave us our alphabet, and the written book and then the printed book and shorthand and the typewriter and the phonograph.

We might all be travelling across country, with a backache, on a camel's back like the Queen of Sheba, if we had been satisfied with camels and had not invented the two-wheeled cart, then the four-wheeled wagon, the stage coach, the steam engine, the express train, the rubber-tired automobile and the flying machine.

To-day the Queen of Sheba would call King Solomon up on the telephone, make an appointment for that afternoon and be home in time for dinner—all because the kings and queens and the ordinary people that have followed her were dissatisfied.

She too, was dissatisfied, poor lady. She had heard about Solomon in all his glory and was bound to go and look at him. Probably travel was improved somewhat by her orders when she came home aching all over.

* * *

Be dissatisfied with your work especially, for it is what you DO that counts, not what you think about yourself or what you imagine you will do in future.

Be dissatisfied with your supply of information and try to get more, no matter how much or how little you may have. The libraries are open and the knowledge is in them.

Be dissatisfied with what you do for those that depend upon you or that have a right to depend upon you.

Old Well Enough is a sleepy, harmful, dismal humbug. Don't have him in your neighborhood. NEVER LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE—MAKE IT BETTER.

THE SIGN OF THE FOUR--By A. Conan Doyle

"L[illegible] said Jon[illegible] I [illegible] the matter more closely.

"[illegible] said he, "that if this man is taken by the commandant he will be hung or shot, and his jewels taken by the government, so that no man will be the better for them. Now, sir, we do the thing as well as it can be done by the two of us, and we can act with us as in the company's offices. There will be enough to make every one of us rich men and great rajahs, save for our brothers in the matter. There is no middle way. Which is it to be, death or life? We can only give you three minutes to decide, for the time is precious, and all must be done before the ironside come again."

"I am with you, heart and soul," said I.

"It is well," he answered handing me back my firearm. "You see that we trust you implicitly. We have now only to wait for [illegible] and then—"

"Then you will do?" I asked.

"We will do the [illegible] your share of the [illegible] If you and I are of the same mind we [illegible] Then you can [illegible] Sholto [illegible] Abdullah Khan [illegible] Mohammed Singh [illegible]

"It rains a still falling steadily, for across the sky, and it was hard to see more than a stone-cast. A deep mist lay in front of our door, but the water was in places nearly dried up, and it could easily be crossed. It was strange to me, to be standing there with these two [illegible] [illegible] for the man who was [illegible] death.

"Suddenly my eye caught the glint of [illegible] at the other side of the moat. It vanished among the mound-heaps, and then appeared again coming in our direction.

"'There they are!' I exclaimed.

"[illegible] Mohenge Ilm sahib, as usual," whispered Abdullah. "Give him no cause for fear, bend in with him, and so shall do the rest while you stay here to guard. Have the lantern ready to [illegible] so that he may be sure that it is indeed the man."

"The light had flickered onward, now stopping and now advancing, until I could see the dark figures on the other side of the moat. I let them scramble down the sloping bank, splash through the mire, and climb half-way up to the gate, before challenging them.

"'Who goes there?' said I, in a subdued voice.

"'Friends,' came the answer. I uncovered my lantern and threw a flood of light upon them. The first was an enormous Sikh, with a black beard which swept entirely down to his cummerbund. Outside of a show I have never seen so tall a man. The other was a little, fat, round fellow, with a great yellow turban, and a pale, puffy face. As the light fell upon him he seemed to be all in a quiver with fear, and right with two bright little twinkling eyes, like a mouse when he ventures out from his hole. It gave me the ebbs to think of killing him, but I thought of the treasure, and my heart set as hard as flint within me. When he saw my white face he gave a little chirrup of joy and came running up toward me.

"'Your protection, sahib,' he panted [illegible] your protection for the unhappy merchant Achmet. I have traveled across Agra [illegible] that I might seek the shelter of the fort at Agra. I have been robbed, and [illegible] and stoned because I have been the friend of the Company. It is a blessed night this when I am once more in safety—I and my poor possessions.'

"'What have you in the bundle?' I [illegible]

"'Oh, but, but,' he answered, 'which is one of my little family matters [illegible] of no value to others, but which I would be sorry to lose. Yet I am a beggar, and I shall reward you, [illegible] of Achmet has the [illegible] he will give me the shelter I ask.'

"'Take him to the main guard,' said I. The two Sikhs closed in upon him on each side, and the fourth fell in behind, while I marched in through the dark gateway. We were a man to [illegible] round with death. I reminded the gate way with the lantern.

"I could hear the measured tramp of their footsteps sounding through the lonely archway. Suddenly it ceased, and I heard voices, and a scuffle, with the sound of blows. A moment later there came, to my horror, a rush of footsteps coming in my direction, with the loud breathing of a running man. I turned my lantern down the passage, straight enough, and there was the fat man, running like the wind, with a smear of blood across his face, and close at his heels, bounding like a tiger, the great, black-bearded Sikh, with a knife flashing in his hand. I have never seen a man run so fast as that little merchant. He was gaining on the Sikh, and I could see that if he once passed me and got to the open air, he would save himself yet. My heart softened to him, but again for the thought of his treasure turned me hard and bitter. I cast my fire-lock between his legs as he raced past, and he rolled [illegible] over like a shot rabbit. Ere he could stagger to his feet the Sikh was upon him, and buried his knife twice in his side. The man never stirred again, nor moved a muscle but lay where he had fallen. I think myself that he may have broken his neck with the fall. You see, gentlemen, that I am keeping my promise. I am telling you every word of this bust ness just exactly as it happened, whether it be in my favor or not.

He stopped, and held out his manacled hands for the Whitmore and water which Holmes had dressed for him.

"It was all very bad, no doubt" said he "I should like to know how many [illegible] in my shoes would have refused a share of this loot when they knew that they could have their throats cut for their pains. Besides it was my life or his as it were. He was in the fort if he had got out [illegible] whole business would have come to light, and I should have been sent me chained and shot as like as not, for people were not very lenient at a time like that [illegible] on with your story," said Holmes shortly.

"Well, we carried him in Abdullah Akbar, and I [illegible] bright he was for all that he was so short. Mohammed Singh was left to guard the door. We took him to a place where the Khitmutgar already prepared. It was some distance off, where a winding passage leads to a great empty hall, the brick wa is of which were all crumbling in places. The earth floor had sunk in at one place making a natural grave, so we left Achmet the merchant there, having first covered him over with loose bricks. This done, we all went back to the treasure

"It lay where he had dropped it when he was first attacked. The bag was in the centre which now lies open upon your table. A key was hung by a silken cord round the owner's hairy neck. We opened it, and the light of the lantern gleamed upon a collection of gems such as I have read of and thought about when I was a little lad at Pentonville, but had Minding to look upon them. When we had feasted our eyes we took them all out, and made a list of them

"After we had counted our treasures we put them back into the chest and carried them to the gateway to show them to Mohammed Singh. Then we went and sewed our oath to stand by each other and be true to our secret. We agreed to conceal our loot in a safe place until the country should be at peace again and then to divide it equally among ourselves. There was no [illegible] for [illegible] for gems of such value were found upon us it would cause suspicion and there was no privacy in the fort for any place where we could keep them. We [illegible] the box, therefore, into the hall [illegible] where we had buried the body and there under certain bricks in the best preserved wall, we made a hollow and put our treasure. We made careful note of the place and say to day I drew four plans, one for each of us, and put the sign of the four of us at the top, for we had sworn that we should each always act for all, so that none might take advantage. That is an oath that I am sure any hand to my heart and swear that I have never broken it.

"Well, there is no use my telling you, gentlemen, what came of the Indian mutiny. After Wilson stormed Delhi and Colin relieved Lucknow, the back of the business was broken. Fresh troops came pouring in, and Nana Sahib made himself scarce over the frontier. A flying column under Colonel Greathead came round to Agra and cleared the Pandies away from it. Peace seemed to be settled upon the country, and we four were beginning to hope that the time was at hand when we might safely go off with our treasure. Our plunder is a moment, however our hopes were shattered, for we were arrested as the murderers of Achmet.

"It came about in this way. When the rajah put his jewels into the hands of Achmet, he gave him a guard of ten men, who were a trusty man. They are sagacious folk in the East, however, so what does this rajah do but take a second trusty servant and send him to play spy upon the first? This man came to Agra and pretended to let Achmet out of his night, and he followed him to the place where he was buried, and saw him pass through the [illegible] Of course he thought he had taken refuge in the fort, and applied for admission there himself next day to the [illegible] This seemed to him so strange that he spoke about it to the sergeant of the gate, and so it came to the ears of the commandant. A thorough search was instituted, and the body was discovered. Thus at the very moment that we thought that all was safe, we were all four seized and brought to trial on a charge of murder—three of us because we had held the gate that night, and the fourth because he was known to have been in company of the murdered man. Not a word about the jewels came out at the trial, for the rajah had been deposed and driven out of India; so no one had any particular interest in them. The murder, however, was clearly made out, and it was certain that we must all have been condemned to it. Then three Sikhs got penal servitude for life, and I was condemned to death, though my sentence was afterward commuted into transportation for life.

"It was rather a queer position that we found ourselves in then. There we were all four tied by the leg, and with very little chance of ever getting out again, while we each held a secret which might have put each of us in a palace if we could only have made use of it. It was enough to make a man eat his heart out to have to stand the kick and the cuff of every petty jack in office, to be glad to eat and water to drink when that our gross fortune was ready for him outside, just waiting to be picked up. It might have driven me mad, but I was always a pretty stubborn one, so I just held on and shut my time

"At last it seemed to me to have come I was changed from Agra to Madras, and from there to Blair Island, in the Andaman There are very few white convicts at this settlement, and, as I had behaved well from the first, I soon found myself a privileged person. I was given [illegible] in which is a small house [illegible] and I was left pretty much to myself. It is a dreary, fever-stricken place, and all be said [illegible] Most of the convicts are wild cannibal natives, who were ready [illegible] blow a poisoned dart at us if they saw a chance. There were digging, and ditching, and [illegible] and a dozen other things to be done so we were busy enough all day; though in the even ing we had a little time to ourselves. Among other things, I learned to dispense drugs for the surgeon, and picked up a smattering of his knowledge. All the time I was in the blockhouse I had a piece of [illegible] but it is hundreds of miles from any other land, and there is little or no [illegible] to be got. So it was a terribly difficult job to get away

"The surgeon, Dr. Somerton, was a fast sporting young chap, and the other young officers would meet in his rooms of an evening and play cards. The surgeon, where I used to make up my drugs, was next to his sitting room, with a small window between us. Often, if I felt lonesome I used to turn out the lamp in the surgery and sit smoking there, so that I could hear the talk and watch their play. I am fond of a [illegible] at cards myself, and it was almost as good as having won to watch the others play. There were Major Sholto, Captain Morstan and Lieutenant Bromley Brown, who were in command of the native troops, and there were the two warders, and [illegible] three prison officials, crafty old hands who played a nice, sly, safe game. A very [illegible] little party they used to make

"Well, there was one thing which very soon struck me, and this was that the soldiers used always to lose and the civil officials to win. Mind, I don't say that there was anything unfair, but so it was. These poison chaps had done little else than play cards ever since they had been out to the Andamans, and they knew each other's game to a point, while the others just played to pass the time and threw their money away. Night after night the soldiers got up poorer men, and the poorer they got the more keen they were to play [illegible] so the heavier [illegible] It used to pay in notes and gold at first, but soon it came to notes of hand, and for big sums. He sometimes would write for a few dozen pounds to get him over, and then his luck would set in against him worse than ever. All day he would wander about as [illegible] and he took to drinking a deal more than was good for him

"One night he lost even more heavily than usual. I was sitting in my bed when he and Captain Morstan came stumbling along on the way to their quarters. They were both very flush, those two, and never far apart. The major was raving about his losses

"It's all up, Morstan,' he was saying as they passed me, 'I shall have to [illegible] sell my pips—I say I ruined man.'

"'Nonsense, old chap!' said the other slapping him upon the shoulder. 'I've had a run of luck myself, but—That was all I could hear. It was enough to set me thinking

"A couple of days later Major Sholto was strolling on the beach; so I took [illegible] to him. 'I say, sir,' said I, 'who is the proper person to whom hidden treasure should be handed over. I know where there is a million worth lies, and, as I can not use it myself, I thought I might as well do the best thing that I could do would be to hand it over to the proper authorities, and then, perhaps, they would get my sentence shortened for me.'

"'Eh! a million, Small?' he gasped, looking hard at me to see if I was in earnest.

"'Quite that, sir—in jewels and pearls. It lies there ready for any one. And the queer thing about it is that nobody else but [illegible] belongs to the first comer [illegible]

"'To government, Small' he stammered, 'to government.' But he said it in a halting fashion and I knew in my heart that I had got him

"You think, then, sir, that I should give the information to the government, Small' said I, quietly.

I told him the whole story, with small [illegible], so that he could not identify the place. When I had finished he stood stock-still and full of thought. I could see by the twitch of his lip that there was a struggle going on within him.

Two nights later he and his friend, Captain Morstan, came to my hut in the dead of the night with a lantern.

"I want you just to let Captain Morstan hear that story from your own lips, Small,' said he.

"I repeated it as I had told it before.

"'Look here, Small,' said the major. 'We have been talking it over, my friend and I, and we have come to the conclusion this secret of yours is hardly a government matter after all, but is a private concern of your own, which, of course, you have the power of disposing of as you think best. Now, the question is, what price would you ask for it? We might be inclined to take it up, and at least look into it, if we could agree as to terms.'

"'Why, as to that, gentlemen,' I answered, trying also to be cool, but feeling so excited as he did. 'there is only one bargain which a man in my position can make. I shall want you to help me to my freedom, and to help my three companions to do the same. I shall then share you into partnership, and give you a fifth share to divide between you

"'But how can we get your freedom? you know very well that you ask an impossibility

"'Nothing of the sort,' I answered. 'I have thought it all out to the last detail The only bar to our escape is that we can get no boat fit for the voyage, and no provisions to last us for so long a time. There are plenty of little yachts and yawls at Calcutta or Madras which would serve our turn well. Do you bring one over to the little island to the north of here by night, and if you will drop us on any part of the Indian coast you will have done your part of the bargain'

"'Well, Said the major, 'we must, I suppose, try and meet you. We must first, of course, test the truth of your story. Tell us where the place is to find, and I dare say record of where he had hidden our jewels. There was not a line, however; so I came away, bitter and savage as a man could be. Before I left, however, I let me that if I ever met my Sikh friends again it would be a satisfaction to know him, and this made him all the fonder of me.

"Tonga—for that was his name—was a fine boatman, and owned a big, roomy canoe of his own. When I found that he was devoted to me and would do anything to serve me, I saw my chance of escape I talked it over with him. He was to bring his boat round on a certain night to an old wharf which was never guarded, and there he was to pick me up. [illegible] No man ever had a more faithful mate. At the night named he had his boat at the wharf As it chanced, however, there was one of the convict guard down there—a vile Pathan who had once missed a chance of insulting and injuring me, I had always vowed vengeance, and now I had my chance. It was as if fate had paced him in my way that I might pay my debt before I left the island. He stood on the bank with his back to me, and his carbine on his shoulder I looked about for a stone to beat out his brains with, but none could I see. Then a great thought came into my head and showed me where I could lay my hand on a weapon. I sat down in the darkness and unstrapped my wooden leg With three long hops I was on him. He put his carbine to his shoulder, but I struck him full and true with the whole [illegible] of his skull in. You can see the split in the wood now where I hit him. We both went down together, for I could not keep my balance, and when I got up I found him still lying in quiet enough. I made for the boat, and in an hour we were well out at sea Tonga had brought all his earthly possessions with him, a few rupees and his gods. Among other things, he had a long bamboo spear, and some Andaman cocoanut matting, with which I made a sort of a sail For ten days we were beating about, trusting to luck, and on the eleventh we were picked up by a trader which was going from Singapore to Jelkah with a cargo of Malay pilgrims

"Well, if I were to tell you all the adventures that my little chum and I went through, you would get thank me, for I would have you here ntil the sun was shining. Here and there we drifted about the world, usually always turning our face to keep us from London. All the time, however, I never lost sight of my purpose. I would dream of Sholto at night, a hundred times I have killed him in my sleep. At last, however, some three or four years ago, we found ourselves in England. I had a great difficulty in finding where Sholto lived, and I set to work to discover whether he had realised on the treasure or if he still had it. I made friends with some one who could help me [illegible] name no names, for I don't want to get any one else in a hole—and I soon found that he still had the jewels. Then I tried to get at him in many ways; but he was pretty sly, and had always two [illegible] fighters, besides his sons and his khitmutgar, on guard over him.

"One day, however, I got word that he was dying. I hurried at once to the garden, and [illegible] that he should slip out of my clutches like that, and looking through the window I saw him lying on his bed, with his sons on each side of him. I [illegible] have come through and taken my chance with the three of them, only, even as I looked at him, his jaw dropped, and I knew that he was gone. I got into his room that same night, though, and I searched his papers to see if there was any record of where he had hidden our jewels. There was not a line, however; so I came away, bitter and savage as a man could be. Before I left, however, I let me that if I ever met my Sikh friends again it would be a satisfaction to know that I had left some mark of our hatred so I scrawled down the sign of the four of us, as it had been on the chart, and I pinned it on his bosom. It was too much that he should be taken to his grave without some token from the men whom he had robbed and befooled

"We earned a living at this time by exhibiting poor Tonga at fairs and other such places as the black cannibal He would eat raw meat and dance big war dans; so we always had a barrel of pennies after a day's work. I still heard a the news from Pondicherry Lodge, and for some years there was no news to hear, except that they were hunting for the treasure At last, however, came what we had waited for so long. The treasure had been found. It was up at the top of the house, in Mr. Bartholomew Sholto's chemical laboratory. I came at once and had a look at the place, but I could not see how, with my wooden leg I was to make my way up to it. I learned, however, about a trap door in the roof, and also about Mr Sholto's supper hour. It seemed to me that I could manage the thing easily through Tonga I brought him out with me with a long rope wound round his waist and he could climb like a cat, and he soon made his way through the roof, but, as ill luck would have it, Bartholomew Sholto was still in the room, to his cost. Tonga thought he had done something very clever in killing him, for when I came up by the rope I found him strutting about as proud as a peacock Very much surprised was he when I made at him with my rope's end and gave him a little bloodthirsty jump. I took the treasure box and let it down, and then slid down myself, leaving Tonga to pay for the four upon the table, to show that the jewels had come back at last to those who had most right to them. Tonga then pulled up the rope, closed the window and made off the way that he had come

"I don't know that I have anything else to tell you. I had heard a rumour about of the speed of Smith's launch, the Aurora, so I thought she would be shandy craft for our escape. I engaged with old Smith, and was to join him a big scow if he got us safe to our ship

"A very remarkable account," said Sherlock Holmes. "A fitting wind up to an extremely interesting case. There is nothing at all new to me in the latter part of your narrative, except that you brought your own rope. That I did not know."

"Good night, gentlemen both," said Jonathan Small.

"You [illegible] Small!" remarked the wary Jones as they left the room. "I'll take particular care that you don't club me with your wooden leg whatever you may have done to the gentleman at the Audaman Isles."

"Well and there is the end of our little drama," I remarked after we had sat some time smoking in silence. "I fear that it may be the last investigation in which I shall have the chance of studying your methods Miss Morstan has done me the honor to accept me as a husband in prospective.

He gave a most dismal groan. "I fear me much," said he. "I really cannot congratulate you."

I was a little hurt "Have you an objection to be disinstalled with my choice?" I asked.

"Not at all. I think she is one of the most charming young ladies I ever met and might have been most useful in such [illegible] we have been doing She has a decided turn for observation, and her analysis in which she preserved that Agra plan [illegible] would have made her a first-class [illegible] But love is an emotional thing, and whatever is emotional is opposed to that true cold reason which I place above all things [illegible] never marry myself, lest I blunt my judgment

HERE THEY ARE AGAIN—MARSHALL MONTGOMERY AND HIS FUNNY DUMMY, GEORGE

MONTGOMERY—Hello, George, how have you been this day?

GEORGE—Oh, all right, thank you, but I had a fall last night that rendered me unconscious for several hours.

MONTGOMERY—You don't mean it! Where did you fall?

GEORGE—I fell asleep.

MONTGOMERY—Oh, well, everybody has their ups and downs.

GEORGE—You said a mouthful then, neighbor. Just at present I'm pretty low down because I'm hard up.

MONTGOMERY—I want some man to figure out how much electricity it is going to take to run my mill. Whom would you recommend?

GEORGE—One of those lightning calculators, of course.

MONTGOMERY—Your brother told me that his wife's new dress was a dream.

GEORGE—Yes; and when he got the bill it opened his eyes.

MONTGOMERY—Say, George, what would you do if you hand $150,000?

GEORGE—I wouldn't do anything.

MONTGOMERY—I suppose there's little use in asking you for that money again, George. I've come to the conclusion that you're a beat.

GEORGE—Sure thing. I used to have a job skinning sausages.

MONTGOMERY—What's the trouble with you, anyway—you look ab downcast?

MONTGOMERY—Were you a bull or a bear?

GEORGE—Neither. I was an ass!

MONTGOMERY—Do you know that your brother is liable to get himself in trouble?

GEORGE—Why, what did he do?

MONTGOMERY—He's going around telling lies about me.

GEORGE—Oh, that's all right, Marsh, as long as he tells lies about you. What do you care. If he begins to tell the TRUTH, then it's time to break his jaw.

MONTGOMERY—You say you spent the Summer in the country, didn't you?

GEORGE—Yep.

MONTGOMERY—See many cows?

GEORGE—Yep.

MONTGOMERY—Did they give much milk?

GEORGE—Milk? MILK? Well, I should snicker! Say, Marsh, those cows up there gave so much milk that they diluted the well water with it!

MONTGOMERY—How did your sister get along at the seashore this Winter?

GEORGE—Oh, in fine shape. That reminds me, Montgomery, we men are not what we used to be.

MONTGOMERY—How so?

GEORGE—Well, we used to be BOYS

MONTGOMERY—It's my private opinion that you're a bit fresh.

GEORGE—To whom are you speaking to whom?,

MONTGOMERY—To none other than you! I can stand for a lot. You might be able to bull frogs and string beans and kid goats, but you can't make a rummy out of ME!

GEORGE—You're just right. SOMEBODY has beaten me to it!

MONTGOMERY—Say, young man, didn't I see you tacking very unevenly along the Great White Way last night?

GEORGE—Well, I'll tell you, Mister Montgomery—

MONTGOMERY—You don't have to TELL me any thing. I SAW. You were tipsy

GEORGE—And let me tell you that when I'm tipsy I can seen double

MONTGOMERY Then you're in luck

GEORGE—In luck? How do you make that out?

MONTGOMERY—Why, when you come home from the club with too big a load of little red apples aboard you see two wives, but get but ONE lecture. Do you know, George, that I have been worrying over what I will wear in heaven?

GEORGE—I know what I'll wear if I see YOU there.

MONTGOMERY—What will you wear?

GEORGE—A surprised look. Say, Montgomery, I'll never ask another woman to marry me again as long as I live.

MONTGOMERY—Ha! Ha! Ha! Refused again, eh?

GEORGE—No, you poor rummy—ACCEPTED. By the way, Monty, I noticed that your brother had an article in the newspaper this morning

MONTGOMERY—So? What was it?

GEORGE—An old pair of pants

MONTGOMERY—Here's a curious story I've just been reading. It's about a very valuable brood hen laying three eggs and then dying

GEORGE—My word! From over-eggsertion I take it.

MONTGOMERY—I met that dear little Miss Brown this morning. Why is she wearing black, George?

GEORGE—She's in mourning for her husband

MONTGOMERY—Plague take you! She never HAD a husband.

GEORGE—To be sure! That's why she mourns. Say, Marsh, keep your little pink ears open and listen to this wheeze. What is the difference between an elephant and a mosquito?

MONTGOMERY—What IS the difference, Mr. Bones?

GEORGE—The shape. Do you know that since I went up on the water-wagon I hate to use a towel on my face?

MONTGOMERY—Why?

GEORGE—It makes me so dry.

MONTGOMERY—Would you like to shake Carnegie's hand?

GEORGE—To tell you the truth, I'd rather pull his leg. I was at a banquet last night and we had every thing a man could wish for MONTGOMERY—Did you have any pale ale?

GEORGE—No, nobody could find a pail. My brother John is in San Francisco now

MONTGOMERY—You mean the doctor?

GEORGE—Yep

MONTGOMERY—How is he getting along

GEORGE—Oh, same as usual, taking life easy.

MONTGOMERY There was a terrible murder in the hotel to-day

GEORGE—There was?

MONTGOMERY—Oh, sure, a paperhanger hung a border.

GEORGE—AHA! Another put up job.

How Things Came About

Wearing Jewelry

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THERE was a time when women did not wear pearls.

But that was before they knew what jewelry was.

It will be remembered that Eve did not even have a spangle.

Away back in the dark ages, because the times before man became sufficient, evolved to get "the best—there was once a scarcity of women.

And men were more valuable [illegible] although by no means as dear. It was, indeed, a fortunate man who had a woman, but there arose a great deal of trouble because [illegible] days it was rather difficult to tell one woman from another.

There was no [illegible] variety in their appearance. They all wore [illegible] the same way, and many a time a huntsman would come home to his cave, toss down an antelope or a goat or an aoudad or whatever it was he chanced to kill, [illegible] and, in a guttural commands order, his wife to come forth from [illegible] the antelope and cook it for supper. Then he would wait a while.

Hearing no response he would naturally become angry and go inside with a big club, prepared to batter the lady's skull a few times, just to teach her to mind. [illegible] disappointment, after having made up his mind to [illegible] with his wife, he would discover that she was not there.

Then he would go hunting around among the other caves looking for her, and half the time he would grab some other woman, whose husband, was absent and [illegible] to come his supper for him.

There was no "Other, serve the papers" business in those days. Sometimes one man would say "Pardon me, you have taken my wife by mistake. Shall I be obliged to kill you if you do not give her back at once." Sometimes the other man would feel quite chagrined and give the lady back, sometimes he would say the lady was his own and then one of the aforesaid cave gentlemen would kill the other, or both would kill each other.

This finally [illegible] a state of confusion. When a man had a woman who [illegible] how to [illegible] and how to make goat-skin pajamas and [illegible] and how to build fires and all that he naturally [illegible] some other man took her, claiming the women looked so [illegible] he could not tell which was which.

So [illegible] a joint of meat or a bit of meaty bone, [illegible] narrowbone. [illegible] one another. But they asked each other, and then one man [illegible] was exceedingly bright, but who was in reality making [illegible] all future mankind, thought out the fool idea of hammering [illegible] and banging it through his wife's ear.

[illegible] would ring his wife up with two earrings, merely as a [illegible] Then they got to making bracelets and spangles [illegible] and finally it became a sort of disgrace for a woman [illegible] to have [illegible] dangling about her.

[illegible] Then some bright creature found that they be adorned. No matter [illegible] was a [illegible] a tusk battle was no possibility of mistaking her [illegible] he dedicated the copper and shell and bone ornaments.

[illegible] invented ear ornaments as a means of identification [illegible] nearly starved for all the women claimed [illegible] Bill would start out for a hunting trip only to find [illegible] that some energetic chap from another clan had invaded their camp with a goat-skin bag full of cheap copper rings and necklaces and other junk, and lured away all the good-looking women in the [illegible].

When the men found [illegible] and make up a lot of ornaments in order to keep their women looks contented. After that there were regular ornament makers and [illegible] with the arrow makers, supported by the men of the camp.

But for some reason or other these ornament makers the tribesmen selected were all very old and decrepit men. However, as a means of identification the ornaments proved a great success.

Sometimes, in those days, a man would come home and find another man there at the cave. "Let me see, two spangle right ear, three spangle left ear, one wristlet—no, no, you not my wife," and the stranger would go on his way. Then the wife would explain that he thought she was his wife, and was trying to identify her by her jewelry.

Naturally that explained everything.

But to-day both engagement and wedding rings look practically alike. And the world is full of trouble.

HEINE AND HONUS

All Stage Rights Reserved by Mr. Hoffman.

HEINE—Honus, what is that a suspendered sentence?

HONUS—A hold up to keep the public in suspense.

HEINE—But still you can't blame the judges for letting all those crooks get off free?

HONUS—Why not?

HEINE—Professional courtesy.

HONUS—From the way it looks, some of those judges [illegible] trying legal suits will soon be trying criminal ones.

HEINE—How?

HONUS—How can they walk into court, look those judges in the face, and call 'em your HONOR? Look at that judge in Chicago. A woman has her husband arrested because he doesn't kiss her every day and the judge decides that a man has got to kiss his wife when [illegible] she wants to be kissed, or go to jail. Is that fair?

HEINE—No, sir. That is injustice on the face of it. Even a woman too much advantage. When she wants to [illegible] a fight with you all she has to do is to jaw you till her voice gets tired, then hit you over the head with a rolling pin, and when you come to and try to get back at her all she's got to say is "Kiss me, dear," and if you don't do it all she has to do is to send for a policeman and have you arrested for non-kissing.

HONUS—I wouldn't kiss my wife no matter how many judges told me I should.

HEINE—If a man told you that you should kiss your wife, believe me, he's no judge.

HONUS—No man has the right to tell me I must kiss my wife.

HEINE—They might have the right, but nobody would have the heart.

HONUS—I heard you and your wife had a fight last night.

HEINE—We did.

HONUS — What's the matter?

HEINE—She got mad because I came home at a quarter of fourteen.

HONUS — A quarter of fourteen?

HEINE—Yes. Didn't you know I had one of those new twenty-four-hour clocks in my house?

HONUS—What is that a twenty-four-hour clock?

HEINE—It's a new invention. The numbers begin at noon. That's one o'clock.

HONUS—You mean if you get up at [illegible] A. M. that you rise at twenty-four o'clock?

HEINE—Yes. You see, the new clock does away with A. M. and P. M.

HONUS—What do you want with a clock like that?

HEINE—You see, I promised my wife I wouldn't come home any more in the "small hours." So I put in one of those new clocks, and now [illegible] I come home the bigger the hours are.

HONUS—But who wants to tell time like that? Imagine a doctor with a sign on his door. "Office hours from half past twenty-one o'clock to ten minutes of twenty-three!" And imagine going into a hotel and phoning down to the clerk, "Call me at nine-teen." He'd think you were in the wrong room and then'd chuck you out.

HEINE—A flat on the ocean?

HONUS—Sure. The new steamers that are being built to go around the world have got complete five, six seven and eight room flats with bath, electric light, servants, janitor, and all the other modern inconveniences. So now by leasing one of those flats you can travel and at the same time have all the worries and troubles that before this you could only get at home.

HEINE—An ocean flat ought to be all right. But if you have a fight with the landlord if you don't pay your rent and you get ejected you'll have to swim back.

HONUS—No. All you got to do is to hire a row boat and move to another flat.

HEINE—But no matter what boat your flat was on, where would you hang out your washing, on the promenade deck?

HONUS—Sure. Or else in the smoking salon. But think of the one big advantage an ocean flat has over a land flat.

HEINE—What is that?

HONUS—Once you got her in the flat you could keep a servant girl, at least until your lease ran out. She couldn't quit in the middle of the ocean. And, best of all, she wouldn't want any nights out.

HEINE—It would be worth taking a long trip in a flat" boat just for that pleasure alone. Only I'm afraid people would talk about you.

HONUS—How?

HEINE—Suppose your wife opened the windows to air out the apartment and a storm came up?

HONUS—Well?

HEINE—Well, how would you feel if the neighbors went around saying that everybody in your flat was soused?

HONUS—What do you care what people say about you? No matter how wicked you are, you can be cured.

HEINE—How?

HONUS—By music. Didn't you read where that great musician is traveling around in the slums curing criminals of their crimes by playing them music?

HEINE—Most of the music I hear will CAUSE more crimes than it will ever cure.

HONUS—That's because you do not know the psychological influence of music. According to this professor, when you see a fellow breaking into a house, instead of sending for a policeman you should send for a musician. Instead of putting him behind the bars you should play him a few bars, and right away he'll reform and be a better man. In that way we can do away with policemen entirely.

HEINE—Then, according to that, the only way a man can be safe is to start right in taking lessons on the flute.

HONUS—It don't make any difference what instrument it is as long as you play music for him.

HEINE—That settles it. To-morrow I take out the burglar alarm and put in a pianola.

HONUS—Now you got the right idea. As soon as you hear a burglar breaking in all you got to do is to sit down at the pianola and give him something from Tanhauser. It's a wonderful discovery. Just think, instead of policemen going around with a gun and a club they'll go on duty armed with a cornet, a trombone or a violin.

Scientific Starving

By Gideon Wurdz.

AGOSTINO LEVANZIN, a young Italian lawyer from the island of Malta, has broken the thirty-one-day fast which he has kept under scientific observation. Levanzin refrained from eating food of any sort. Water was the only thing which passed his lips. The subject finished the experiment in excellent health.—News Item.

NOW that Scientific Starving has accomplished its desire,
Let the Higher Cost of Living take a tumble and retire;
Fill the Ancient Oaken Bucket with libations from the well,
Set the groaning banquet table with a daisy from the dell!

Tuck your napkin in your collar, clutch your modest bill-of-fare,
Take your choice of just two courses—either Water or Pure Air.
Should you chance to be a gourmand, take BOTH courses, if you please,
Following the "aqua pura" with a toothsome Summer Breeze!

There's some danger of dyspepsia if you bolt this heavy feed—
Then, if etiquette permits you, use a toothpick when you're through,
Making dental excavations where the gentle zephyrs blew.

Thus does Science deal a knock-out to the Higher Cost of Food,
And the Family Provider is in optimistic mood.
By the simple scheme of Starving, he can flourish like the rose
And can send the Food Trust Robbers where the twining woodbine grows.

Oh, the Ultimate Consumer—he of mytho-Lodge-ic fame—
Will quite shortly be the master of the Anti-Eating game,
And, although his belt line shortens, it's his bank account that grows,
As he flouts the Beef Trust Barons from behind a well-thumbed nose.

So a toast to Anti-Eating, to the Foodless Bill-of-Fare,
To the nourishment in Water and the nutriment in Air.
May our tongues all other victuals and all other foods eschew—
Till some Grasping Corporation gets a corner on these two!

Our English Cousin at a Baseball Strike

"SINGULAR institution, your game of baseball, the way it is played now," observed Lord Esterhazy, of the Esterhazy Fusileers and the Dunbar Dragoons, to say nothing of the Imperial Lancers, "altogether too boisterous and vehement. Cricket isn't in the least that way, old chap. Very little discussion, if any. Now and then there might be a slight remonstrance from one of the peerage, you know, but even that happens very seldom.

"Your people that go to witness the game of baseball are a bit too impetuous, I should take it—too blooming ready to cast aspersions and all that sort of thing on the men that are doing their best to assure success and glory for the club that pays them their wage, you know.

"At your ball park the other day one bounder that was sitting next to me saw one of your fielders, or whatever you call him, dropping a very difficult fly ball. I fancy that he jolly well tried for the ball and that the beastly sun got in his eyes. That frequently happens in England too, old chap. In any event, the bounder sitting next to me let out one of the most unearthly roars that I have heard on this side of the blooming ocean, and from that time on he got after the unfortunate gentleman that had dropped the ball I am speaking of. Why, the beggar called him 'Butterfingers' and 'Bonehead!' Fancy calling a man a bonehead when every man knows that no head is composed of bone. I imagine he meant a bone skull, but that struck me as a useless word to use, because every skull is made up of bone and—and cartilage—and lime and all that sort of thing. Fancy a man twitting another man because the other man has the same kind of a head that the man has that called the other man the name, you know. Very stupid repartee, I should say.

"I ventured to remonstrate with the bounder, and he took my remarks with bad grace, I must say. He turned around to me after I had reminded him that the outfielder had jolly well tried, and he said, 'Tuck your ears under your English hat, you ass!' I had a very good notion to chastise him at the moment, but one must keep one's dignity, so I remained perfectly quiet. But not so with the bounder next to me. 'If I want to talk to the players I am going to talk to them, you simp,' he said. Fancy anybody calling me a simp, especially a beggar to whom I had never been introduced. He said a lot of other things, too, about Bunker Hill and Paul Revere's ride and other things that are only incidents long forgotten by any true E. Binman, old fellow.

"I didn't care so much what the bounder called me or said to me, however. It was the constant abuse that he gave the blooming players, every one of whom was doing his best to win. Here are some of the names that I wrote down on my blooming cuff: 'flat,' 'yellow dog,' 'bum,' 'dope,' 'slewfoot' and 'lobbygow.' Singular word, that last one—'lobbygow.' Whatever in the world did he mean?"

Hear the Wind Blowing Through Miles of Whiskers.

WE have had waiters' strikes and baseball players' strikes, and all kinds of strikes lately, and now the barbers may strike.

The news has shaken the republic to its foundations.

Every man in the United States is in a state of extreme agitation, except Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court; Mayor Gaynor, of New York; John Burroughs, the naturalist, and a few other citizens.

Scientists point out that if every man in New York is forced to grow whiskers the noise created on a breezy day at the Flatiron Building by the wind whistling through the feathers will deafen every person in the Greater City.

In view of this menace, it is probable that the State will intervene should such a strike become general. State shaving shops will be organized and a special tax levied on hair restorers to pay the bill.

Suburban Notes

Now is the time to plant pumpkin pies if you want to be in time for the Thanksgiving season.

Sweet peas should also be planted now. Be careful to plant them in plenty of sugar.

To prevent chickens from scratching up your garden make soup of them.

By PROFESSOR PENCIL.

STUDENTS AND OTHER CHUMPS—In reporting a yacht race or any other sporting event it is essential to know as much technical dope as possible. Get the swing of the sport into your stuff to give it pep.

Begin a yachting story this way:

"Her owner was at the wheel, and at the critical moment cut the main sheet, thus releasing the anchor and giving the yacht a winning list to larboard.

"This manoeuvre brought the Atalanta up in the wind, which of course, increased her speed to a marked degree."

DID YOU KNOW THAT----

Strawberry shortcake will not be spoiled by the addition of strawberries?

Flounders may be captured by dropping a heavy anchor on them?

Married Life the Ninth Week

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal Examiner

NOTE.—In all stories you read of "Married Life in the Nineteenth Year," "Why I Left My Home" and all that sort of thing you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps nobody cares about him anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late.

READERS of my diary will remember how I had told in former installments of my efforts to provide entertainment for Lucy and how home to dinner. They will also remember my efforts never met with success that, indeed, we seemed to make things considerably worse.

[illegible] time when Lucy made her usual kick about [illegible] in the house all day and then having to sit [illegible] cheerless dinner while I made no effort to [illegible] until I thought it [illegible]

"There you go," said Lucy, "snapping at me already, although we haven't been out of the house two seconds."

I wasn't!

"If you won't stop arguing for my sake, stop for your own. Everybody in the car is looking at you as if you were a freak."

"But [illegible]

"After practically dragging me out of the house, when I wanted to stay quietly at home, but yielded to your selfish desire to dine at some gay restaurant—although, goodness knows, you have gayety enough in the city all day while I am cooped up in the house without a visitor all day, except the grocery boy to collect a bill, or a man trying to sell me a hand-painted set of Balzac for $35 a volume—and then to insult me in a public conveyance—I won't stand it a moment longer."

It was at this point that I jumped off the car quickly and rushed home to get some cold beef out of the ice box and lock myself in before Lucy could get back to the house.

THE SILVER CRUCIFIX--By James Francis Dwyer

LESOUF'S "All Nations Cafe," at Thursday Island, carried more rascality to the cubic inch than any merchandising crib south of the Line. The roof of hell was worn mighty thin under Lesouf's. It gathered the dredgings of the Malay Archipelago, the toughest of the tough from Australia, and a Polynesian rabble that would go to the junk heap without examination if they arrived in Hades on a buoy day. Gee! Yes! I admit that bunch gave Miss Virtue the frigid mitt the day they climbed out of their cradles, and ninety-nine per cent. had chronic nightmares of a greased rope while the lady of the scales and the bandaged peepers had waiting for them in some civilised centre of this old mudball.

Captain Jack Cameron didn't drop into Lesouf's for social pleasure. Not much! In the company of that bunch of pearl thieves, blackbirders, New Caledonian escapees and ex-convicts it was dangerous business unless you kept a sleepy watch over your person while you twisted up your facial arcs.

But Cameron had business on hand, and a place would have to be hot enough to fry a salamander to keep him out if he wanted to go inside. Despard, a sixty-three inch Frenchman who owned the Coral Queen, had a job for Captain and as Despard had a fancy for Lesouf's cafe, we rolled in there to get definite information.

We dropped in about midnight, and a little storm cloud was just rocking over the whisky bottles in the middle of the bar. The boss bully between Hell's front door in the Kara Sea and the Peri's smile, was baiting a drunken sailor, and the crowd in the place were enjoying joy convulsions at the rate of ten a minute. It takes a full-sized bully to raise a good laugh crop and Penley was the biggest size made.

"Where do you come from?" he roared, as the sailor propped himself against the bar. "What breed are you, Mister Man?"

The drunk tried to brush the hair out of his eyes, and fell over himself while doing it. "I came from "Merica," he spluttered. "Little ole Stars an' Stripes, thatan mine."

"O, yah!" yelled the man baiter. "You came from America, did you? Yah! Four Americans came in here last night, and I eat 'em up. One—two—three mouthfuls, see? Now I eat you! Yah!"

The bunch roared as that big brown Samson shared his yellow fangs and made a bluff at biting the drunk, and Cameron watched him with an eye as cold as a mutinous Swede. Captain Jack had ordered a drink that he didn't know what to do with, but when Penley came snapping and snarling round that poor drunken dev'l Cameron saw a good chance to dispose of it. He tipped the glass of rum down the big brute's back, and it made a stain on his white drill suit that looked like a map of Manhattan Island.

"Was it on purpose?" he roared "Tell me quick and I will kill you!"

"Yes, yes, it was done purposely," said Captain Jack. "I wanted to show this friend of mine how the Hudson River flowed by old New York. You know where New York is, don't you? It's in America, the place where those four men came from that you chewed up the other night. Just turn round a minute till I show Murphy where the Coney Island boats run down your left shoulder. It's the best map of the Battery"—

But that big brute was scenting through the air before Cameron had finished. Catnip and cucumbers! Wasn't he active! He led off with his right hoot at the captain's stomach, and sent a left swing at the jaw when Cameron shifted himself out of the way of the flying trilby. Fights were short and swift when Penley took a hand, but he hadn't run against many like Jack Cameron. As the big crosshread whizzed by, Cameron ripped up an uppercut to the chin, and if that bully never practised back somersaults he made a pretty good attempt for a novice.

He got up slowly, his eyes blazing like the emerald peepers of the Leaning Buddha at Hakodate, and then he stood for a moment measuring Cameron.

"You said you chewed up four Americans the other night," laughed Captain Jack. "I guess your digestive machinery must be out of order to-day."

Penley let out a bellow like a Yap witch doctor, and rushed, and then Cameron threw up the ace-in-the-hole and did a Barney Oldfield stunt. The brown Samson wanted to do the mud-dredge act and gather Cameron up in his big hooks, but Captain Jack wasn't in the humor for atmospheres he hugged. Not him! He had turned himself into a human gatling gun, and he was firing fists at Penley at the rate of sixty a minute. Uppercuts, jolts, straight stabs, and right and left hooks flopped on the big brute in showers and the more he danced away from them the more he collected. Generally speaking, he's a sight! His manager started to swell like a bullfrog in a temper, and every time he hit the floor he knocked a whiskey bottle off the shelf with the shock. Cameron waited on Penley as he came up for the seventh time, and when he went down before a straight jolt to the point, he knocked the lamp out of the socket, and that pleased the fifty-six darkness that he stayed on the floor to think out how he had done it.

There was quiet for half a jiffy in that hole then the place started to buzz like a Maine sawmill.

"Look out!" whispered Steel. "They're coming! We felt that they were. They had never seen Penley licked out before, and the shock kept them quiet for half a minute. Then they rushed.

"Kill the swine!" roared a big Cingalese who had been chased out of Queensland for bushranging.

"Kill him!"

"Sure," murmured Murphy, and he whacked the tough under the ear and dropped him like a bag. Rags may experimenting with one of those new-fangled trunks that are labelled unbreakable. I guess that cuss thought the wrath of God had hit him on his offside sound accumulator.

Hell got off the chain just then. Penley was the boss bully in Torres Strait, and every one of that bunch wanted to get a smack at Cameron to show their affection for the brown guy on the floor. They charged like hobbes at a pie factory, and we backed against the rear wall of the cafe. Steele and Murphy and Cameron sending sleepmaking punches in all directions.

Steele was as gentle as a sympathetic porpoise when he once presses him hard. His arms, legs, and head went flying in all directions, and whenever a section of him brought up against one of those wolves they thought that a cyclone or a tidal wave from that had got loose from the milky way. Murphy was seven degrees worse than the little engineer. He grabbed a pint bottle from behind the counter, or a leg of the bar, and when the mob charged, he mowed them down like a traction harvester

But it didn't look healthy for us just then. Not much! The mob were on top of us, clawing, howling, and cursing, and just when I was thinking up a prayer that would ward off a sudden death, the back seemed to move out of the shanty, and a hand gripped my arm and dragged me outside.

"Come sia way!" cried a voice. "Sacre! Ces pigs will kill you! Where is see capitaine? Run like see devil! Run"

It was Despard, the little Frenchman who owned the Pelican, and he hung on to Captain Jack like a patent stump extractor when Cameron wanted to stand his ground.

"Run!" he shrieked. "Tonnerre le Dieu! You will be eaten. Come, and I will tell you of see way to serve Penley. Come to see schooner."

We biked after the little man, dodging scrub shacks and native bikes as we raced down to the water front, and way behind us came the yells of the pack that had found out we were treacherous. A taxi like the back seat, and giving "I Discretion a perch in the stalls. Murphy was still carrying the leg of Lesouf's bar, and Despard was spluttering information to Captain Jack as we stumbled through the darkness.

"You will meet zose pigs again," he gasped "Zat is sol I will tell you of sat devil, Penley. Sacre bleu! yes!"

We struck the shore, and Despard stirred up two sleepy sailors with a handful of small stones so that they were ready to push off the minute we piled aboard. And you can bet we didn't lose any time in climbing in. Penley's pals were streaming over the sand like a pack of wolves and a Colt or two started to jerk little flam patches into the darkness that was so thick you could cut it up and can it.

"Pull!" roared Despard. "Ide down Capitaine Cameron! Ide down!"

But Cameron wasn't the sort of fellow to lie down when he heard Penley roaring on the beach. He called out to the big bully and advised him to cut Americans out of his bill of fare, and that brought a shower of lead around us. The little Frenchman cursed like a Bokharan camel dealer

The riding lights of the Pelican bobbed up out of the darkness, but the moment we climbed over the rail, Despard had every light on the schooner doused in double quick time.

"Now I will tell you about Penley," he said. "Come into see cabin with me!

We crowded down into the little cabin of the Pelican, and the Frenchman turned up the lamp. A big man was sitting with his head leanin on the table, and when he didn't move as we pounded in, Despard touched him on the shoulde

"Here are friends, Leonard," he said quietly. Look up!"

The big man lifted his head then, and the five of us stepped back a pace. Just where that man's eyes should have been were two holes and we didn't need telling what happened. We struck a trader at Malekula in the New Hebrid once, and he had a face like that. We found him crawling along the beach raving for water and the two holes in that poor devil's face brought the scene back to us. The monkey faced Malekulans, the fiercest niggers in Polynesia, had bored the eyes out of the trader, and we waited to hear who had done the job for the big man sitting at the table in the cabin o the Pelican.

"It is zee work of sat devil Penley," said Despard, when Cameron looked up inquiringly. "Sacr bnfant! Yes! It is his work. Listen and I will tell you zee story. If I tell it wrong Leonard shall call me a liar."

It wasn't a long tale that Despard told, but it was long enough for us. Sufferin' s mneral wasn't it? Leonard had been prospecting up round the Kukukuku country on the Gulf of Papua, and he had struck a treasure and, Penley had come along, grabbed the lot, put out the poor devil's eyes, and set him adrift on a raft. Despard coming down from Port Moresby with the Pelican, had picked him up thirty leagues from the shore, and had brought him on. That was al

"But what treasure did Leonard find?" asked Cameron

Despard opened his mouth to speak, then he stopped, looked at the blind man and shook his head. "Leonard better tell of sat himself" he stammered. "He knows better what to say."

The blind man lifted up his head and turned toward the spot where Cameron was standing "I found some of the treasure of Lorenzo de Gomez," he said quietly. "It was that treasure that Penley took away from me."

Cameron pulled his eyebrows down over his eyes and scowled. Leonard looked a new one on him, and he ran his list of acquaintances over his mind before speaking

"Who was Mr Gomez?" he asked "I never heard of him."

The blind man twisted his lips into a smile but it didn't look quite like a smile with those empty sockets to it. It was. It just did not "He was the first European to sail into the Malay," he answered. "He was a Portuguese and he discovered Borneo and New Guinea."

Cameron glanced at Despard, but the little Frenchman was pulling his mustache and looking at the cross beams of the ceiling. It looked as if he didn't wish to influence Captain Jack's judgment

"That wasn't yesterday, was it?" asked Cameron

Leonard didn't answer for a moment. It seemed as if he was weighing the question to see t Cameron was quizzing him. "It was three hundred years ago," he said softly. "I didn' know the date till I saw it on the article tha Penley took from me.

"What article was the date on?" asked Cameron

"A silver crucifix," said Leonard promptly. "A silver crucifix about eight inches long that had

Paint out the name [illegible] sooner and put [illegible] I've got a hunch that [illegible] know that I'm stuck [illegible]

The little Frenchman [illegible] Cameron [illegible] It will be done to-morrow he said [illegible] moving ahead.

Despard made [illegible] came out of the [illegible] ears straining to [illegible] given us the cut

It came again and Despard cursed. "It [illegible] devil, Penley [illegible] how I [illegible] he knows I have [illegible] with me, and if he knows zat we have [illegible] on board he will follow us to Mr Diet [illegible] while will run into see"

The [illegible] dropped out of the dark like [illegible] and [illegible] ploughing down to [illegible] little [illegible] flying [illegible] and the rest of us lay quiet and listened to [illegible] I enroll a lap of high-keyed curses [illegible] plunging at us

"He [illegible] cried the little man "It's [illegible]

It [illegible] was going to walk [illegible] and I guess we would have don [illegible] on The man at the wheel had got [illegible] paralysed when that thing sprang at [illegible] Captain Jack was alongside him in time to save the situation. The Coral Queen swung herself out of the way in the nick of

[illegible] Mackay

The Coral Queen swung in through [illegible] gates, and we slipped our anchor in a bay that looked like a big jade cup half full of cream de menthe.

Despard was so mighty anxious to go on the crucifix hunt that Cameron ordered out a boat the moment we had made things snug, and away [illegible] eastward the treasure ground. There [illegible] Leonard and Murphy, Steele, Despard [illegible] Jack and myself, and you just bet we weren' a bit excited. The blind man took out the silve [illegible] how the thing was lying [illegible] a ledge of sandstone when he found it and when those diamonds blazed in the sun they made every [illegible] in our heads water

We pulled out to a thin neck in the peninsula on the shore side of the big knob that looked like the skull and we landed there. It was a nit [illegible] at the point where Leonard found the cross, so Cameron decided to climb over the sandstone hill and get down to the shore without taking a risk

We didn't go slow up that lump of bare lime stone. You bet we didn't! Visions of diamond encrusted jewelry bobbed up before our eyes as we scrambled up the slope, and a whole pleiades of silver crosses ran through our brains like the lines of a drunken bicyclist

Despard started to explain the position of the reef to Leonard, but the blind man didn't want much explanation about that spot. He seemed to see it through his finger tips My, yes! I guess the finding of the cross had impressed it so mighty hard upon his brain that he knew nearly every stone upon that ledge of rock that was [illegible] above high water mark

I found it about here," he said, "but Cameron explained where he was standing "There's a [illegible] in front of me [illegible] there? Well, this [illegible] spot"

Captain Jack sat Leonard down [illegible] rock and then we got down to business. Didn't we hunt! I guess never blinked once during the first three hours we were scratching round there. Not a blink Up and down we went on [illegible] and [illegible] the place till we [illegible] every little shell within a hundred [illegible] the spot where Leonard was sitting Murphy struck [illegible] end of a sword blade. Steele found a small bronze bell, but that was all The sun was roasting us pretty vigorously and we were mighty thirsty after scraping round there with our backs bent

"I think we'll go back to the boat," said Cameron. "I'm as hungry as a crocodile. We can come back again when we feel up

We didn't need any pressing to knock off A lot of the ginger was out of us then, and we followed Cameron up the slope

Races Rival of Brides for Society's Favor

JUNE brings few things more joyous to the smart set than that great out-of-door equine tournament which opens on the 17th, the Country Club races. Even now the dressmakers and milliners are driven to distraction with the demands upon their time and ingenuity by those of the fashionables who are not importing their gowns for the occasion.

Still the brides of June are holding their own and are to literally take the city by storm.

Yesterday, the opening day of the month, had brides galore to its credit, among the most important nuptial events being the wedding of Miss Hannah Wheelwright Cobb and W. Appleton Lawrence at the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, at 12:30; that of Miss Dorothy M. Sturgis and Lester W. Harding, St. Stephen's Church, 3 p. m.; that of Miss Molly Hall and Arthur W. Page at the Episcopal Church in Milton and that of Miss Marjorie Bliss Simes and Ralph D. Nickerson, Hotel Somerset, 8 p. m.

On Monday evening Mrs. Loveland entertained at a dinner at her home on Milton Hill in honor of the bridal party and later in the week Miss Constance Clark of Philadelphia gave a dinner for the bridesmaids and ushers at the Summer home at Marblehead. The bride's attendants were Miss Katherine Page of New York, a sister of the bridegroom; Miss Dorothy Bolles, Miss Constance Clark, Miss Ruth Wigglesworth of Milton and Miss Elizabeth Parker.

Miss Cobb a Bride

Another important wedding of the day was that of Miss Hannah Wheelwright Cobb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bane Cobb, and William Appleton Lawrence, son of Bishop and Mrs. William Lawrence, which took place at 12:30 at the Church of the Redeemer at Chestnut Hill, and was followed by a reception at the Cobb home on Dunster road. The guests at the church were limited to the members of the two families and the more intimate friends on account of the small size of the edifice, but the reception was largely attended.

The ceremony was performed by the bridegroom's father. The young couple will make their home in Cambridge, where Mr. Lawrence is to continue his studies at the Divinity School.

Quaint little St. Stephen's Church was the scene of a pretty wedding yesterday when Miss Dorothy M. Sturgis became the bride of Lester William Harding. The ceremony took place at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Harding is one of the three sons of Mrs. Albert E. Harding, who recently returned to her home in Cohasset after several months' travel abroad. The youngest son is Richard Bruce Harding, who on the 5th of June is to marry Miss Katherine Clark.

Following the wedding there was a small reception at the Sturgis home in Beacon street. On Tuesday the young couple will sail for a honeymoon in Europe, where Mrs. Sturgis is also to spend part of the Summer. Upon returning from the honeymoon they will make their home in Cohasset.

Another interesting wedding yesterday was that at 8 o'clock at the Hotel Somerset of Miss Marjorie Ellis Simes of St. Paul street, Brookline, to Ralph D. Nickerson, also of Brookline. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Thomas Van Ness of the Second Church.

The ceremony will be directly followed by a reception at the Gilbert estate, "The Homestead." The bride is a sister of Mrs. George Herman Fowers, Jr. (Madeline Davis), of Beacon street, whose wedding took place several years ago.

Among the earliest of the June Weddings will be that of Miss Alice Frances Morton and Thomas Mack Claflin, which will be solemnized on Monday afternoon, June 3, at 8 o'clock, in St Paul's Church on Tremont street. The ceremony is to take place in the Church of Our Savior, Longwood, and a small reception will follow at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Philip Dunaresq, No. 58 Bay State road.

The wedding will be exceedingly quiet, as the family is still in mourning for Mr. Dunaresq.

Mrs. T F Davies and Miss Davies, mother and sister of Bishop Davies of the Episcopal diocese of western Massachusetts, are in Lenox, looking for a cottage for the Summer.

OUR GRANDMOTHERS USED SAGE TEA TO RESTORE COLOR TO GRAY AND FADED HAIR

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for the hair and are fast following suit.

The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready-to-use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy.

The growth and beauty of the hair depends on a healthy condition of the scalp. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy will help the dandruff germs which rob the hair of its life, color and lustre, makes the scalp clean and healthy, gives the hair strength, color and beauty, and makes it grow.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA CAUSES ANXIETY BY ERRATIC ACTS

QUEEN MARY IS ANNOYED.

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, June 1.—An incident which occurred during the recent informal visit of the Dowager Queen Alexandra to the Shakespeare Exhibition organized by Mrs. George Cornwallis West, is being discussed at many social gatherings.

Queen Alexandra on looking up at one of the old world houses espied the initials "R. R." Turning to Mrs. West, she cried impulsively:

"How sweet of you, dear Mrs. West, to remember him."

Mrs. West, being a woman of wisdom, made no effort to explain that the initials stood for Elizabeth Regina, not for Edward Rex.

Queen Alexandra's erratic movements are causing considerable anxiety, not only to her own household but to many people outside. She frequently changes an order half a dozen times a day and members of her household are consequently kept busy guessing as to which instruction will be final. The Queen Mother shows an almost painful desire to keep before the public, although the double bereavement she has suffered recently in the death of the King of Denmark and her Cumberland nephew will prevent her from making public appearances for awhile.

As soon as it is known that King George and Queen Mary are to visit an exhibition or institution, Queen Alexandra sends word that she is coming the day before. The officials are therefore embarrassed, as they cannot possibly tell the Queen Mother that the visit of the sovereign and his consort should come first.

Russians Deprived of Benefit of Their Business Acumen.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 3.—In the new issue of the Russian Industrial Gazette, a government publication, there is a declaration by Ozeroff, who is an important economist and an elected member of the Russian Council of the Empire, on the Jewish question. Ozeroff declares flatly that Russia treats the matter from an entirely wrong point of view.

He declares that the commercial nobility of the Jewish race has done a great deal to make the business development of the United States the envy of the rest of the world. According to his statement there are 700,000 Jewish commercial agents on the road in the United States engaged in opening markets for the newest kinds of manufactures.

Russia complains that she cannot create an active business life outside of her agriculture. Ozeroff argues this is largely because of the mistaken rule of enclosing all Jews in the pale and preventing the community from benefiting by their commercial quickness and energy.

Ozeroff's article has raised a great outcry among the reactionaries. On the ground that it appears in a government publication, it has attracted serious attention and many believe Prime Minister Kokovseff shares some of its views.

"My work is done," said Mr. Stead, "I shall die a violent death."

SOCIAL BOYCOTT ON THE TALLEYRANDS

Duke Related to Half the Nobility of France, but Not One Accepts His Invitations.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 1.—If anything further were needed to demonstrate the complete boycott of Duchess Anna Gould Castellane de Talleyrand and her husband it was found in the last dinner party they gave. As they are now in comparatively easy circumstances they have begun to entertain, but the trouble is to find among society people those willing to be entertained.

The Duke de Talleyrand is related to half the nobility of France, yet he cannot find one willing to accept an invitation to his festive board—even professional diners-out, who would accept the invitations from the merest parvenus, turn down those of the duke and duchess.

Won't Even Borrow from Duke.

Nor does grinding himself necessarily compel a needy noble to go to the Talleyrand routs. The Duke can soon afford to lend money, but the needy noble dare not borrow it, paying only the small price of attendance at the routs and receptions, for social ostracism would surely follow.

Of all the dukes and duchesses who felt honored at being asked to partake of Anna Gould's hospitality in the days when she was the hostesses of kings, and when her four Summer receptions were the best in Paris, not one now condescends to accept her invitations.

"We have driven La Petite Gould back to the ranks of the plutocracy," said the most active Dowager Duchess in Paris, exulting over the society debacle of the Talleyrands.

Not One Titled Guest.

The guests of honor at the last dinner were Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Alexander of New York. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Labouchere, formerly Miss Whitney Hoff daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Hoff, and grand daughter of the late Commodore Whitney of Detroit; Miss Fuller, daughter of the late Judge Fuller, of New York; Mrs. Newhouse, of New York, and Mme. Barroiet de Ricou, of Paris, formerly Miss Appleton Fuller, of New York. The party was such as the average member of the American colony who is not in the titled set might get together. No one was there to show that De Talleyrand has even one society friend in all France.

Bradley Martins Settle.

LONDON, June 1.—The Bradley Martins and their daughter, the Countess of Craven, who are next door neighbors, will be settled in Chesterfield Gardens next week and Mr. and Mrs. James McDonald will start a series of dinner parties at Cadogan Square shortly.

PRINCE IS RIVAL FOR WIDOW'S HAND

Ludovic Pignatelli D'Aragon Has Quit Pursuit of Miss Duke.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 1.—A new version is given of the reason why Prince Ludovic Pignatelli D'Aragon will not wed Miss May Duke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke of New York.

The Spanish grandee, whose mother was a Cavendish of the Cavendish Bentinck family, is said to have set his heart upon inheriting the great wealth of the late Arthur J. Hinckley of New York.

With this laudable object in view he has been laying siege to the heart of the young widow of the yachtsman. Indeed it is broadly hinted that the Prince is quite as much in love with the yacht Columbine as with the widow, but as both go together there is no obstacle.

Prince Is Much Older.

Nor is the difference in age considered an obstacle by the Prince, although Mrs. Hinckley's twenty-two Springs look green beside the many Autumns of Pignatelli.

There is very serious rival, however, in the person of Mr. Irving Addison Lyon of New York. Mr. Lyon is not rich nor has he a title, but he is energetic and has the reputation of being the cleanest and best dressed man in Paris, whereas the Prince cannot claim any such distinction. Furthermore Mrs. Hinckley's mother, now Mrs. Wood of New York, favors Mr. Lyon in preference to the Prince.

Old Friend of Family.

Lyon has known mother and daughter a long time and the outlook is that if the young widow, who was originally Miss Beach of Chicago, does not become a Princess, she will marry the "cleanest and best dressed man in Paris." Mr. Lyon has lived here for the past thirty years and was once a champion sculler.

Mrs. Hinckley has taken gorgeous apartments in the Avenue Malakoff, quite close to those occupied by Mary Garden and not far from the Gould-de Talleyrand residence. The Prince carries on his love making from a modest hotel in the Rue Cambon.

Amelia at Concert.

LONDON, June 1.—Queen Amelia attended a concert given at Sunderland House by the Duchess of Marlborough, on behalf of St. Vincent's Home for Cripple Children at Eastcote. Her majesty, who was attended by the Marquise de Fayel, wore a dress of heavy black silk broderie, a high plumed black hat, and lovely pearl ornaments. The royal guest was received by the Duchess of Marlborough, with whom were Lord and Lady Loval, Lady Edmund Talbot and the Duchess of Wellington, the last-named attired in dark charmeuse and old lace.

Prince of the Asturias and Princess Beatrice Have Great Royal Gardens for Playgrounds.

Special Correspondence to the Sunday American.

MADRID, May 20.—Like real fairy story princes and princesses, living in beautiful palaces with great parks as playgrounds, and donkie and ponies and carriages and everything that they could wish for, with soldiers as their playmates, with white-capped nurses and governesses following their footsteps, and with an army of servants to do their bidding, are the children of the King and Queen of Spain.

Four children have come to bless the union of King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, who was a royal English princess. With all the traditional homage, regal state and lavish indulgence that law comes to them through their father's side, their mother has seen to it that the children led a healthy, out-of-door life, with the consequence that there are probably no happier children in the world today than the Prince of the Asturias, the eldest son of King Alfonso and heir to the throne of Spain, and the Princess Beatrice, his sister.

The second son of the King and Queen, Prince Jaime, was born with a defect in hearing which has kept him under the care of physicians in an attempt to correct the fault, but he, too, often joins his brother and sister at play in the royal gardens attached to the palace at Madrid.

"The Baby," the Princess Maria-Christina, is yet too young to enter vigorously into the sports of childhood, but she is an out-of-door baby like the rest, and in her nurse's arms follows her brother and sister in their spacious grounds.

The Prince of the Asturias shows the fine spirit and mettle of his father. He is without fear and is already an accomplished horseman, although but just turned five years, and able to drive a team of donkeys about the roads. He is a soldier, enlisted in the First Regiment of Infantry, and has as a constant companion a young soldier from the same regiment.

Princess Beatrice is not far behind her brother in her love for adventure, although not quite three years old. She rides a pony, after being securely fastened in her seat, but needs no artificial aid to hold her own in the swing and on the teeter board.

ALL ENGLAND AROUSED.

Flying Sailor Man of Moment in Britain.

LONDON, June 1.—There is a new interest in aviation. The navy's hydro-aero plane has aroused it; the proposed series of flying exhibitions over land and sea will encourage, increase, and gratify it. It is an interest greater than attaches to another step forward in engineering science, for with the new flying machine has arrived the new man, the new type of airman.

The man of the moment is Lieutenant John Arthur Commander Charles R. Samson, the flying sailor. His exploits in Weymouth Bay, afloat and aloft, in H. M. S. Amphitrion, have seized the imagination of England as no other development of the wondrous new science of aviation has yet succeeded in doing.

It is with strong feelings that we have seen an aeroplane issuing from the element upon which is established the dominion of our race. We understood, perhaps, for the first time, what the word aviation meant, as we saw sea power project itself to a higher dimension.

Mrs. Mackay in London.

LONDON, June 1.—Everyone is pleased to learn that Mrs. John Mackay, of California, whose absences from London have been very long of late through bereavements and poor health, has decided to spend the remainder of the season here at her wonderful house in Carlton House Terrace.

Russian Courts Bar All Boxing Contests

Base on Law Forbidding "Lower Orders" to Use Fists on Each Other in Public or to Use Bad Language.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 1. The courts have decided that boxing matches in Russia may be, or at least are liable to be, prosecuted as a violation of the law against using bad language in public or to use fists on each other. Recently Petroff, who manages a theatre, put forth a challenge to contest for money, prizes among English and French boxers. The director of St. Petersburg General Statistics, on first hearing the news, got a disorderly conduct warrant. He was overruled by General Kurlof, Minister of the Imperial Police, who ordered that the show be allowed to proceed.

Petroff went on spending money up to the last moment the premier imposed an absolute veto and affected that the prefect's first decision should be acted upon. Petroff then sued Bratchevsky for $7,000 damages, this being money spent in launching the show and apparently spent on "squaring" Minister Kurlof's department.

The Supreme Court rejected his claim and based its judgment on a statute of the Empress Catherine, issued 126 years ago, directing her ministers to see to it that the lower orders should not use their fists on each other in public or use bad language. According to the court, the boxers would constitute the lower orders and the spectators doubtless would provide the bad language.

JET ORNAMENTS IN FASHION

Society Leaders Wear Them in Crowns, Tiaras and Filets.

LONDON, June 1.—Not long ago jet ornaments were considered dowdy and early Victorian, but just now they are in vogue and to an extraordinary extent. The best-dressed women in London, such as Lady Alexander, wife of the actor manager, have appeared recently wearing jet crowns, tiaras or filets.

The designs in these crowns are almost as numerous in millinery. Among the most attractive is one worked entirely in a Greek key pattern with a great pear-shaped ornament in the center, flying aught to the scheme.

Another example is composed of tiny crescents of jet, mounted one above the other, with a little jet disc depending from each which swings lightly with each movement of the wearer.

RICH ANARCHIST FINDS REMEDY FOR HIGH LIVING COST

Wipe Out Present Social Organization Controlled by Capital.

"Money the Mechanism of Exchange and Wealthy Have Falsified Its Function."

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 1.—M. Fromentin, the famous multimillionaire anarchist, who is said to have 10,000 followers in France, and has established a colony in Morocco, has been interviewed by the war correspondent of the Journal. Fromentin, who feeds the mind with such literature as "Mental Contagion," by Dr. Vigouroux; "A Study of the Brain," by and Flossing; "Hester Psychology," by Hemet; "Poisons of the Intelligence," by Dr. Legrain; and "Mechanism of Thought," by Ferrel, said:

"I have the most profound respect for every living thing. Law is not revolution and revolt is wasted, but revolution or knowledge of literature. My chief defect is oversensitiveness for human suffering. The mystery of fellow-man moves me profoundly. Now I find myself in the presence of human suffering, I never hesitate to give help, and without inquiring about the opinions of the victims of modern social organism.

Thinks Problem Solved.

"I to knowledge of human suffering which has inclined me to study the great problems of social interest. I think I have solved this problem in my forthcoming volume, called 'My Elements on Scientific Sociology.'

"The cause of the high cost of living is found in the bad circulation of riches. The capitalist class has falsified the function of money, the object of which is to facilitate business. Money is the mechanism of exchange. It's also is to assure circulation. All metals, taken together represents all who has taken in outlays.

"Poverty increases with overproduction. Why? Because products cannot circulate. Because money, the mechanism of circulation, is absorbed in enormous quantities by capitalists who do not give the equivalent in labor or personal services for its possession.

Worse Than Robber Barons.

"Capitalists today represent the robber barons of the middle ages. Their names alone have changed. Great trusts rolled produce very much as robber barons did the peasant barons. Observe that the necessities or immediate wants of man are limited. On the contrary the wants of money are limitless and can absorb a limitless amount of money. Capitalists create the wants of luxury and enormous quantities of money are absorbed for the production of things useless in the life of man.

"The unit of currency serves to assure the exchange of a quantity to the profit of the workers or producers.

"Another proof is that the machinery of production is not modified in use in that it can do to three times more than the institutions of protection to increase the wealth of the whole community. There is frequently a limitation of the property of unscrupulous monopolies. These latter have the extraordinary right of refusing to produce to the detriment of the production which alone could be transformed into wages.

Money Made Scarce by Juggling.

"Thus money is plentiful, this money make is scarcer in the end of labor. Hence, the circulation of products becomes more difficult because the power of purchase decreases and the circulation of money is to the body politic what the circulation of blood is to the human body. Nor is the imposition of an income tax a remedy because the price of products remains dear.

"Moreover most of our money in the possession of capitalists is not the equivalent of their labor, but the result either of speculation or exploitation of workers. No one strikes against an increase of wages and get it. Capitalists respond to a correspondent increase in the price of which, of course, the workers must pay. Work is an article of merchandise, like any other, its quality and quantity determine its price.

New Organization Imperative.

"A social organization in which reform is impossible is a mortal body. It cannot last long. It should be made to disappear. We must establish an equilibrium between the needs of consumption and production. The capitalist regime is essentially incapable of solving the problem of society. Our capitalistic organization belongs to a crisis, a strike, a loss of business, poverty and suffering in each other in public or use bad language. According to the court, the boxers would constitute the lower orders and the spectators doubtless would provide the bad language.

"The logical remedy is to remove the cause of suffering by substituting society an other and more honest for it.

"Let me add that in capitalistic society the honest are driven to crime, the criminals, in despair revolts against the exhibition of luxury and the result is he is pushed to new crimes.

JEWELRY FOR BABIES.

Infants of Rich Parents Bedecked with Rings and Bracelets.

LONDON, June 1.—Baby jewelry is the latest craze among London jewelers. Whether it is spreading among infants is not definitely reported, but it is noticed that the baby shows of late are more ornamented upon it has disappeared and now in Hyde Park one may see chubby fingers and wrists more wonderfully bedecked. One little miss of twelve months was seen toying with a teddy bear and displaying eight rings and three bracelets, while at her side of the Hyde Park Hotel a nurse in charge of twins was also guarding a great quantity of rings, bracelets and necklaces. The rings are made of very thin gold, attached to the bracelet by a small chain to prevent the child from swallowing them.

DYNAMITERS SAVE WORK ON THE FARM

TAMED EXPLOSIVE WORK

Specially Reported for the American's Farm Page.

Dynamiters on the farm? What next! Next, say the converts of the blowing up type of cultivation, come cleared land drained land, land that is in better condition, and bigger crops. In plain speech, they say that dynamite is usable and useful as an aid to agriculture.

I saw at the Massachusetts State College a demonstration of some of the things that can be done with explosives instead of tools. Similar demonstrations have been given elsewhere in New England by the E. I. Du Pont De Nemours Powder Company.

Making Kindling of Stumps.

Of the crop results of farming by explosion I cannot speak. What the demonstrations very loudly argued to me was, that farming by dynamite is a modern method, and that with explosives, stumps can be taken out, hard-pan subsoils broken up, trees planted and ditches dug with a minimum of labor.

The stumps removed ranged in diameter from one foot to thirty inches, and required from one-half to four and one-half pounds of 40 per cent dynamite. With rosins in half-pound sticks and costs seventeen and one-half cents per pound. The cost of the dynamite to remove a thirty inch stump was therefore seventy-seven cents.

After holes were made under the stump with a crowbar, the sticks of dynamite were dropped down the holes and tamped in. When the dropping and tamping began, I started off to see a neighbor, but the demonstrator told me that the dynamite was not sensitive, I told him I was. But he looked so sorrowful because I disbelieved him that I consented to stay. I wanted to see if he was going to up for membership in the Ananias Club.

The charges were set off either with a time fuse or with electrical charge. The huge stumps, torn to pieces, were hurled high into the air. The holes were practically cleared of wood.

Breaking Up Hardpan.

In subsoiling, a hole was driven with a bar to a depth of three feet or to the clay hardpan. A half stick of twenty per cent. dynamite was then tamped down with a rod, tilled with cap and fuse. The hardpan was thoroughly broken by the explosion, hence roots would be able to penetrate deeply into it. The shattering up of the "pan" creates reservoirs for water, thus improving drainage and increasing the storage of moisture at the same time.

In planting trees, an eighteen-inch hole is dug, and either a whole or half stick exploded in it without tamping. The earth is not thrown out, but is loosened so that it can be easily removed. The immediate soil is broken up and pulverized, and the earth loosened for several feet further. Into the loosened soil the roots of the newly planted tree reach easily.

It is said that with dynamite, trees live more surely and their growth is hastened. This is on account of the better rooting and earlier seizing of plant-food elements.

Dredging by Percussion.

The ditching was done in swampy land. Holes were driven eighteen or twenty inches deep, eighteen inches apart, and sticks of 60 per cent. nitroglycerin dynamite placed in them. Many of the holes were filled with water. As the 60 per cent. dynamite is more sensitive a cap and fuse placed in the middle hole was sufficient to set off all the cartridges. The ditch was thus opened at one shot.

The earth flew high into the air. The "cut" was a fairly regular excavation, about five inches wide at the top, eighteen inches at the bottom, and about six feet deep. It needed only a little shoveling to even its banks and smooth the bottom.

The estimated cost of ditching by this method is eight cents a linear foot. Little work is necessary. High earthen banks, such as are left after ditching, do not result, as the soil is spread over a wide area.

As a saver of time, labor and money, the new method certainly seems successful. In one respect, however, I was disappointed. When a man spends money on an accident policy he wants something to happen. That demonstrator was too cheerful.

SOIL AND POULTRY PLANT.

By CLARK L. THAYER.

Select a well drained soil for the poultry plant," says Ernest D. Wadd, soil expert of the extension staff of the Massachusetts State College department. If possible select a soil that slopes to the southwest A rather gravelly and sandy soil is best suited to the needs of poultry.

If the soil is not sufficiently drained by natural means, devise some method, and put in tile drains. The best kind of tile are those in three inches in diameter and one foot in length. Put the ends closely together, but do not cement the joints. It was once supposed that the water entered directly through the porous tile, but now it is believed that it enters chiefly at the joints.

Acidity of the soil does not make a great deal of difference with the poultry, but it does with the crops that they may try to grow. Some crops will not grow on an acid soil. If you want to grow the small grains to feed the poultry, such an acid soil will not do. Acidity may be remedied in part by the judicious use of lime.

By all means save the poultry manure to use as a fertilizer. The average valuation of the fertilizing materials, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, in a ton of droppings is set at $15, which is too large an amount to be wasted needlessly.

The manure is usually stored in barrels, but unless some other material is added, fermentation takes place and the nitrogen escapes, in the form of ammonia. To prevent this, mix some material with the manure, as hand plaster or gypsum or some form of phosphate. The manure may ferment but you will not lose the nitrogen, as it then combines with the added material. Floats, or raw ground phosphate is the cheapest material. Don't make the mistake of putting lime with your manure; lime will surely cause the nitrogen to escape.

"BLOW UP" CULTIVATION AND THE RESULTS

Canning as a Home Industry Opens Way for the Women Folks

"There lives a woman with a business head," said a driver, pointing to a farmhouse near a large orchard on a wooded hillside.

Her sales home-canned fruits and home-made jellies at a fancy price. Most of her trade is with grocery stores in the larger towns and manufacturing places. She has quite a little canning factory now, having added equipment from time to time as her business grew. Her canned fruit sells at a high price, and she could sell more than she makes."

One wonders why, with the skill of New England women in turning out delicious canned fruits and the market which them do not take advantage of the opportunities there are for supplying such trade as the Vermont woman found ready for the goods.

A market always exists for what is truly a "fancy" article, and in producing home-made jellies and home-canned fruits, the energetic woman will not find a serious competition from the large companies. There is still a place for the small home industry that finds and supplies the special demand. R. J.

GRAPE EASY TO GROW.

Good Vineyards Scarce in New England Nevertheless.

Although the grape is one of the easiest fruits to grow, good vineyards are scarce in New England. While grapes will thrive in any soil too poor for other agricultural purposes, the more care given a vineyard the larger will be the profit.

Many methods of pruning the grape are used, but one large principle governing them must be constantly borne in mind. The fruit is always borne near the base of the growing shoots of the season, and these shoots spring from wood of last year's growth. A shoot usually does not bear over two years, and it is safe to say that it is necessary to prune the grape severely each year in order to make it bear heavily.

Among the various systems of pruning, the four-cane Kniffin system is perhaps one of the most widely used. The grape is trained against two wires, the upper one about four feet, six inches from the ground. The vine is severely cut back. A large, healthy-looking cane of last year's growth is left on each side of the trunk for each wire. These canes should start as near the trunk as possible to keep the vine as clear as possible of the old wood.

Leave four or five buds on the upper canes, and the same on each of the lower ones. The canes should be tied to the wire with woolen string, the string being tied half-way toward the end of the cane. More than one string should be used, if necessary, to secure the cane.

There are many systems in use, but they all accomplish the same purpose, namely, to determine the habit of the vine, to make it easy to spray, to facilitate spraying, training, cultivation and the gathering of the fruit.

STRAWBERRIES EASY CROP

Will Give Much Satisfaction for Little Labor.

By ROBERT S. FAY.

No plant will give more satisfaction for the same amount of care and expense than our garden strawberry. Strawberries are not difficult to raise, and require only simple care.

The soil should be fairly light, well drained and well pulverized by enabling with a liberal content of stable manure. Set standard varieties rather than a collection of "nurserymen's wonders," and be careful to have the sterile varieties with perfect-fertile ones, in order that the plants may cross fertilize and bear fruit. The plants are usually set in rows, three inches apart, with eighteen inches between rows. In setting the young plant, first tip the roots, cut off superfluous leaves and stand it in moistened earth if the soil is dry.

Cultivation is essential to keep down weeds, save moisture and keep the conditions favorable for the plant to feed, and to keep going. It is not too late to set out plants now, since the season is a back one.

If beds were covered in the Fall with straw or litter, and mulched in Spring, the varieties as Sharples, Marshall, Haverland and Bradbury are most suitable.

SOUND FRUIT IS SAFE.

Bees Even When Hungry Won't Attack It.

Every now and then we have complaint of how bees will attack and eat fruit; and to a casual observer, at least, they appear to actually do bite through the skin, suck the juices, until the specimen is shriveled and ruined, more or less, of its flavor, juice and size. Careful investigation has shown repeatedly that bees never attack sound fruit, no matter how soft the skin nor how easily the juice can be coaxed within the skin.

Some years ago Professor N. W. McLain, then in the employ of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., conducted an elaborate series of experiments in which he placed sound fruit, consisting of grapes, peaches, apricots and the like in hives containing bees brought to the verge of starvation. This fruit was left with the hives day after day, but it was never once molested. Then he tried breaking some of the fruit in the hives, and in every case all such specimens were attacked by the bees, who sucked up the juices until nothing was left but the skin and seeds.

The increasing use of the silo makes silo manufacturing important, and it is not unlikely that the manufacturers will feel like trying to assert their claim.

LOBSTER AND CHAMPAGNE READING FOR RURAL HOME

Lobster and champagne are all right their place. But they do not belong in daily fare; at best they are for gala occasions. Lobster-and-champagne ideas have been the downfall of many a country boy and girl. They crowded out the bread-and-butter-and-fried-chicken ideas and unbalanced things.

A good many agricultural papers, that are excellent in their information and editorial columns, set forth too many lobster-and-champagne ideals in their literary departments. Stories of girls who passed as princesses, and other literary delicacies of similar kind, are not objectionable occasionally. There is no reason why the rural reader should not enjoy the same literature as other readers enjoy it, but there is a good reason why some kinds of reading should not be thrust upon him to the exclusion of others.

Literature is the interpreter of life. Literature that does not help to make the meaning and purpose of life plain to the reader is inferior and often injurious, except for purposes of mental relaxation and diversion are sought. The function of reading is to bring the reader to understand himself and his surroundings better. There may now and then be profit to the country youth or maiden in learning somewhat of the superficial view of many entirely life among adventurers and adventuresses. But a novel of real love, effort, ambition, honor, flagrancy or self-forgetfulness would do more to inspire content and create contentedness on the part of the rural reader than all the lobster-and-champagne stories of imaginative society-life concocted for restless and unoccupied women with chocolate-caramel-and-matinee conceptions of life and pigeon-brain conceptions of human destiny.

Unfortunately, rural life has been on the whole so contemptuous toward young men and women of imaginative minds that few of them have cared to live on in the country and become its interpreters in literature. There is little good contemporary reading of rural life, although there is a great need of it.

REACHING THE STRUGGLE POINT.

In ten years (1900-1910) our population increased roughly 21 per cent. At the same time the acreage of our most important staples, corn, the cereals—corn, wheat, oats, etc.—increased 2% per cent. Manifestly unless more bushels be produced on every acre, there must be fewer bushels to feed more mouths. The increase pointed to in the cost of living during this one influence alone is enough to stay us.

We are at a point in our national economy where every acre must produce an increasing amount without a proportionate increase in production cost. All that learning, science, industry, patriotism and the spirit of humanity can do will presently be needed to keep us from the struggle point that has been reached by other nations that has been reached to solve the problem that we now begin to face.

PLANT A PLENTY WHILE YOU'RE PLANTING.

High prices for agricultural produce may be expected for the farmer—and they may mean only higher prices received, or they may bring profits.

But with a special effort to produce a larger yield, either by planting a larger acreage more economically or by producing more per acre, the farmer may increase his income and get help to keep the necessities of life within the reach of those who cannot afford necessities that are luxuries in price. The public-spirited farmer will this year try to produce the greatest amount at the least possible cost

RURAL EDITOR'S ACRE

By Professor Robert W. Neal, Mass. Agricultural College.

ART OF SLAUGHTERING WITHOUT KILLING.

Everybody wanted a parcels post—that is, everybody in rural life. Everybody asked for it. Everybody heard from the members of Congress that the matter would have "careful consideration." And everybody finds that everything resembling a parcels post has been smothered and smuggled in the House of Representatives.

The process was the usual one of tangling up the fate of the bill with technicalities of parliamentary practice. Hence every opponent can say that he was merely voting on a question of procedure. But everybody knew that he proved in the way proposed meant to suppress the amendment by making it impossible to get a parcels post.

Sixty-five members dodged by being absent or not voting. The New England representatives in Congress who were present and voted to proceed this way, and therefore to refuse a genuine parcels post, were:

Gould of Maine.
Peters of Massachusetts.
Weeks of Massachusetts.
Murray of Massachusetts.

FINDING THE MONEY SPOT IN APPLES

The close of May found the indications excellent for a large yield of apples, failure here and there apparently has not been enough to threaten a lessened crop. The apple grower, therefore, will expect the full normal competition in the market. With a normal crop in the market, quality and appearance will be especially important in determining sales and profits. Hence the fertilizing which will prepare this year to produce the best quality of fruit rather than the largest amount. Cultivation for size and color, and careful and attractive packing will be likely to make the difference between the money making and the not money making yield.

OUR OLD FRIEND THE CHINCH BUG

Should acquaintance be forgotten, there will soon be time to renew it. Any acquaintance like the chinch bug, for there is no telling when he will appear again, with his sharp nose and his cruelties and his nephews and his aunts.

That is the experience of Illinois, at any rate. The chinch bug, little known to us in New England, has become expert and proficient in his proper behavior in the West, and will turn out again in the great corn and wheat State. Reports of chinch bug activity come early, and to interfere with the hatching period, these insects will be seen again in their old-time numbers. The State entomologist and the agricultural papers are engaged in a campaign of rapid re-education of the farmer in methods of combating the destructive little enemy.

A LAWSUIT WITH A SILO

Certain types of silo are said to be covered by patents issued when the silo was a new invention. Manufacturers of silos who pay royalties under this patent allege that the building of silos involving the patented principle—which is that of the continuous vertical door—are constantly infringing their rights, and intimate that farmers building their own silos after this style will be held responsible.

The New England Homestead has investigated the matter and taken legal advice upon it, as a consequence of which it announces the conclusions that the farmer may build his own silo on this principle without violating the patent. However, a lawsuit might be necessary to establish this right if a silo manufacturer chose to make trouble, and the courts might reach a conclusion different from that reached by the Homestead's counselor.

MAKE APPLE FIT THE ENVIRONMENT

In Selecting Varieties, Consider Climate, Disease, Weakness and Culture.

"In deciding on varieties of apples," says Jacob K. Shaw, an experiment station expert, "the New England grower does wrong in being guided by the choice of varieties made by Western or Southern growers. The climate of the section should largely determine the varieties to be planted, but the amount and kind of treatment needed and susceptibility to disease and pests should also be considered."

The contention on the part of Mr. Shaw is supported by experience, which shows that varieties of apples that are particularly successful in Oregon, Missouri or New Jersey are likely to prove unsuccessful in another section. The fruit tree must be adapted to its environment or it will not give the best results. Individual treatment, as well as climatic and soil adaptation, is required for different varieties, and this treatment must be worked out by the grower himself.

Different Varieties, Different Rules.

Thus, spraying and pruning must be adapted to the variety, since the varieties differ in form. Generally speaking, an upright form is undesirable. Again, there are no altogether resistant trees. Some varieties, however, resist certain diseases better than others, and thus not only are adapted to particular districts, but also will thrive under a different handling. The well-known McIntosh is particularly subject to scab, although a fine apple. The Baldwin and the Greening must be held back; the Wealthy must be pushed.

Early and abundant bearers are undesirable. The Williams is an early bearing, but only a moderate lived tree. Again, most trees on blemish bearing—some more strongly so than others. The second sort will bear more abundantly than the first sort.

Uniformity in size, form and color is striven for. Wealthy and McIntosh are good, while Early Harvest is not, so uniform in size. Northern Spy and McIntosh are definite dealers varieties; the Ben Davis a course apple.

Doubtful New England Types.

Baldwins are good in Massachusetts, but poor in New Jersey. Grimes may be good in New Jersey, but poor in Massachusetts. A Southern variety in a short, cool Summer, does not do well. Accordingly, the winesap in New England is likely to be a small size, inferior color and poorer quality, lacking richness and sweetness.

The under color of an apple is very important. Russet-colored fruits follow the under color shows, the better is the condition and qualities of the fruit. Similarly is fit for market apple suffers in a climate where there is a longer, warmer Summer. Keeping qualities is poorer in such a case, also the Summer heat is likely to produce good color, but poor keeping qualities.

All of which tend to conclude that of the three factors of success in apple growing, quality, soil and climate, climate is of great importance, because man cannot control it. Apples do not grow well when the mean temperature of the Summer season (March to September inclusive) is more than five-five degrees F. Hence the free apple region of North America lies in the Appalachian belt as far north as New York and Lake Michigan. In this belt, the mean temperature may vary from fifty-two degrees to seventy degrees F. The northern limit of apple growing in States is also a good apple region.

It is unwise to go to show that the successful variety in New Jersey, Missouri or some other portion of the country is likely to be successful in New England, where the conditions are not the same.

New England Apple Zones.

New England may be divided into three main belts. Below is given a list of varieties adapted to each:

Southern—The Lower Connecticut Valley as far North as Hartford. Varieties: Esopus, Delicious, Fall Pippin, Jonathan, Red Canada, Twenty Ounce, Wagner, Winter Banana.

Central—Massachusetts, Southern, New Hampshire, Southern Maine, Western Vermont and the Lower Berkshires. Varieties: Baldwin, Gravenstein, Hubbardston, Jonathan, Northern Spy, Rhode Island Greening, Roxbury Russet, Tompkins' King, Wealthy, Williams. Of these the Red Canada, Twenty Ounce, Wagner, Wealthy, It is well, however, not to attempt Baldwin in the hilly districts more than 1,200 feet.

THE RURAL MAIL-BAG

Rural Mail Bag:

I notice that you advise against the use of lime on potato land. Is it not true that some successful growers make free use of lime with potatoes?

Yes, some growers have reported that lime did not seem to increase potato disease nearly as much as expected. However, is against the practice until more conclusive evidence is at hand. If lime is free of scab disease, and uninfected seed potatoes are planted, there should be little danger that the crop will show scab. It may also take some little time for scab to become infectious badly enough to show serious injury. But disease is just as disgusting if it does not kill the plant. The individual instances of success when lime was used on scabby land, together with the grower wishes to experiment himself. That of course means a "gamble" on the outcome.

Rural Mail Bag:

What is meant by "balanced ration?" Is a balanced ration the same for different animals? I want to know how to feed a cow as I have never bought to work on my village place.

A balanced ration is a ration that gives the right proportion of the nutrients needed to keep the animal in good health, condition and strength. The requirements are different for different animals, and there are also many well balanced rations that will answer a like purpose. The rule is this for horses:

No. 1—Timothy hay, pounds that the horse weighs, feed 1% lbs. of protein, 1.2 lb. carbohydrates and .05 lb. of fat. The ration for a horse at hard work. The following rations are suitable for horses at work on 1250-pound horse according to the proportion given above:

No. 1—18 pounds oats, 14 pounds timothy hay.

No. 2—15 pounds corn, 14 pounds clover hay.

No. 3—10 pounds corn, 7 pounds bran, 14 pounds timothy hay.

If you will write to the animal husbandry department of the agricultural college in your State, you can probably get recommended rations made up especially to suit local conditions, considering the common vet feedstuffs and their relative cost. Rations should be changed from time to time to give the animal variety and keep up its appetite, and also to get the necessary proportions in the cheapest form. Two equally good rations from the viewpoint of effectiveness may show a considerable difference in price.

Rural Mail Bag:

I am glad the AMERICAN has this agricultural page, but I don't see a great deal about poultry. Why is it that you always buys the Sunday AMERICAN, and there must be a good many ladies who would be interested in it about flowers. Here are some things I have learned:

Plant out doors from the middle of May to July 10 in sunny exposure. Plant in fine, deep, soft soil. The manure used should be well rotted and mixed in thoroughly. Rake the seed bed smoothly, for the seeds rarely come up through clods. Scatter the seed broadcast, not too thickly, and when the young plants are an inch high, transplant or thin out to two inches apart each way. Covering the seed too deeply is bad.

About the thickness of the seed. It is best to cover with over the seed. The seed should be thoroughly watered, and the soil kept moist before planting. After planting it should not be watered very much, only a fine spray in order to prevent washing out the seeds.

Rural Mail Bag:

Neatly painted buildings improve the looks of a farm immensely. One judges the prosperity of farmers by the appearance of their farms. If the buildings are gray and weather-beaten, the observer guesses that the people living there are either shiftless or poor. A farm with freshly painted buildings contrasts very favorably with this other type. The observer at once feels that a thoroughly successful man lives there. If this observer was a man who wanted to buy a farm, which one would be attracted to?

D. J.

Rural Mail-Bag:

In the ordinary country farm there are many places that are just what the fly wants to breed in. The stable and barnyard, the pigpen, the privy, the open sewerage systems and stagnant swamps and pools are the principal places of insect breeding on our farms. HEALTH.

Rural Mail Bag:

What perennials would you advise for the flower garden? ROSE.

Good perennials to plant are English daisy, campanula or canterbury bells, oxeyedaisy, larkspur or delphinium, foxglove, hibiscus, hollyrose, hollyhock, everlasting sweet pea, hardy pinkroses, sweet william and scarlethemum.

NEW FIRELESS BROODER PLAN

H. V. Tornoblen furnishes the design for a fireless brooder which has many good points, among them being satisfactory ventilation and economy of construction.

The fireless brooder may be employed for secondary use for brooding in warm weather or in heated houses. It may be also used in emergency cases where the hen leaves the brood a little too soon, when the brooder becomes overcrowded, or when the brooder is wanted for another and younger flock, but where it is hardly time for the brood to take to the colony houses.

The brooder shown in the illustration is made in four different parts, each of which may be easily and quickly cleaned. The floor is constructed of the box is 2x2½ feet. The height is eight inches. The floor is made to fit up in the box so that the four walls fit tightly on the floor of the brooder box. Where the walls of the box sit on the floor of the brooder it is too easily displaced and does not fit tight enough.

Four holes are made in the corners of the box an inch apart, and bore the top hole an inch from the top ledge of the wall. A peg is fitted into one of the holes in each corner to hold the boxes at any height suited to the size of the chicks. There are also four large holes in the walls of the box, one in each corner an inch and a half to two inches in diameter, for ventilation. These ventilators are made high enough so that the air must pass through the cloth of the hover before it can reach the chicks. In this way there is a continuous inflow of pure air without a draft. The slides may be made to fit the ventilators, so the supply of air may be regulated during exceedingly cold nights.

The hover shows two folds of cloth dropped down, but another fold or two may be added with good results. The cloth is hung in New England is likely to be cut into long strips as is the usual case and this makes the cutting of the cloth easier. Woolen flannel is the best material to use. An old blanket is generally available.

The top is made to fit down tightly on the box and may be covered with tarred paper or tin if it is to be used outside during the Summer.

Blackberries Prove a Profitable Crop

For Commercial Raising, They Must Be Produced Near the Market—Planting Systems.

There is good profit in blackberries. They will grow on a wide range of soils, but the type of soil they do best on is a rather heavy loam. A clay soil is too cold and drier soil than strawberries and some other small fruits. For commercial raising, the garden should be near the market, as the berries need to be delivered soon after being picked.

Blackberry plants are usually started either from the cuttings of from suckers from old plants. The canes take root when bent down and covered with earth. These may then be cut from the old plant and put where desirable.

Blackberries are usually planted on the square system or in rows. Planting equal distances apart each way gives the advantage of being able to cultivate both ways. Six feet apart is a good distance. This allows for 1,210 plants to the acre. Another way of setting which is perhaps just as common, is to set the plants in rows, leaving about four feet between plants and six or seven feet between rows. This makes from 1,000 to 1,200 bushes per acre.

Planting in rows makes it possible to train them on trellises.

Neatness and attractiveness of boxes goes far toward making a success of berries for the market. A crate will help one more to put up the berries in an attractive form. It makes a great deal of difference in their sale.

TRAP NESTS UPSET MANY OLD IDEAS

Theories of Poultrymen Exploded When Accurate Records Are Obtained.

Many old notions vanish when hens are "run through" trap nests. Theories which poultrymen have nursed for years are exploded when convincing tests are made. A poultryman who used trap nests for years reports that the results of three year's accurate work are better than a life time of haphazard mating. He reports these results:

First, there are mighty few, if any, 200-egg strains. 2nd, There are few hens in any flock that will break the record of 200 eggs in 365 days. 3d, That as a rule these heavy laying hens produce the poorest layers in the flock. 4th, That the average layer, one that is what would be called a regular layer, is the hen that produces the phenomenal laying hen which approaches the 200-egg mark.

Fifth, That rough and rigid, long and round eggs will hatch and produce as perfect birds as good shaped eggs. Again never in several years, did a hen that laid a rigid egg ever throw a pullet that had the same tendency. 6th, Some hens will produce quality in pullets and cocks in cockerels, no matter how mated and vice versa.

Off-Colored Birds.

Seventh, some of the best colored hens will produce the most colored birds, no matter how mated and vice versa. 8th, some of the heavy Winter layers fall to make a good average for the year, but as a rule, they can be depended upon to produce birds that have the Winter laying habit. 9th, that some of the hens which are treed most frequently by the male, lay the fewest fertile eggs.

Tenth, that hens do not always lay exactly the same shape or color of eggs. 11th, that a very small per cent. of the females in a mating (put together before being tested by trap nest to know what they will produce, produce any quality in offspring. 12th, that the most prolific layers throw a small per cent. of strongly fertilized eggs. 13th, that the weak germs are laid as a rule, by the same hens.

Fourteenth, that hens forced for Winter eggs seldom lay a large per cent. of hatchable eggs. 15th, that every pullet or hen for the breed are among the poorest layers.

"Facts" That Go Wrong.

Now in the face of these facts it is interesting to see some who have never used a trap nest tell something as a fact that won't work once in a dozen times, and to see how wonderful to one is that we have made such wonderful development in some of the breeds and at the same time have had no assurance at the beginning that anything could be accomplished. The only thing that seems to have kept the ball rolling is that like will produce like more often than any other one or several of the ideas advanced will prove successful.

In breeding for eggs, we are at sea when we use the trap nest, and we are not far from. The reason may be that her strength is given toward a heavy production of eggs and she is unable to make this heavy production and have power enough left to fix this characteristic upon the female offspring

The surest way to gain in an increased egg yield would seem to be to breed from the average layers with a male bird. This is one of the chances whereby we can succeed. In such a mating we have a flock with more certainty than we can produce by any grain from breeding from the phenomenal layer. It does not seem to be within her power to reproduce her own kind, but something else and the cockerel from her mated to the more prolific hens of average layers may have the desired effect.

Poultry Failures.

The usual summer disappointment among the smaller class of poultrymen is reported. They had planned to enlarge their flocks and have failed despite good intentions and hard work. Some are discouraged to the extent of abandoning the business.

The owner of a few acres, who has built up a considerable business in eggs and poultry products, naturally seeks to improve his stock and reach after the fancy breeds. He sells $25 or $30 worth of carefully set them under hens, giving each one not more than nine eggs. The result is to be no mistaken if attention to details could not be given to the chicks during the next results. The tragedy hens were about to come off, and the chicks were not very disgraced a poultry yard. They cut enough papers, and are astounding the owner in the night, roosting on the boxes and breaking the eggs, for they will not sit on the eggs.

Twenty-five dollars is a pretty high price for six baby chicks and only time will tell whether the poultryman has thrown his money away.

Another man who made his first attempts in the use of incubators has conducted his flock and because of infertility and weakness in the germs, has failed to get a start of nine chickens. Early laying pullets mean the beginning of poultry profits.

There are hundreds of incubators and brooders for sale because something has gone wrong. Their owners have broken one or many of the laws of nature. Overcrowding or circumstances over which they have had no control have cured them of the "hen fever."

"Obstinate" Incubators.

It seems that incubators are often as obstinate as human beings and will not operate according to expectations. Conditions which the manufacturer can not anticipate or control sometimes make it undesirable for so many failures.

The proof of a good machine, which was an egg developer and had never paid for the cost of it had consumed all of it again this year. It was tried before sending it to the kindling pile. Of the surprise of its owner more than 300 fertile eggs were put along and two subsequent batches were as large.

The man who owns and operates that machine has proved that it did satisfactory work after so many failures.

The poultryman is not far from Boston who gets his best hatches from an old wood-burning stove. It is worth $2, and his second best machine is held together by the aid of pins and tacks. The machine, as a general thing, was a complete failure and the stove is the only one that succeeds.

While it is generally agreed that the more you pay the more you get, it is often reported that a man here and there has made a success with the simply constructed machines.

Probably the first time that the successful poultrymen must be half hen to win. One of the things that the hopes of the poultryman-to-be won't sear too high. After they have been in the business a short time they will learn that they won't wear out the multiplication table figuring up the increases in their flocks.

If everything would go according to the expectations of some of the amateurs, eggs couldn't be given away and poultry would be so cheap that every hog would have chicken three times a day.

UNION LABOR NEWS OF GREATER BOSTON

Organizations Show Gains in Membership—Meetings of the Future.

Danger of the strike of the so-called Hotel Employes' Union at New York spreading to this city is declared to exist by John J. Kearney, business agent of Boston Waiters' Union No. 80, the regular A. F. of L. organization.

Despite the fact that there are union wages and working conditions in 180 local hotels and cafes, he asserts the greater number of the really big establishments still refuse to deal with either Local No. 80 or Local No. 226, the colored waiters' union. It is in these non-union places that trouble is feared.

Mr. Kearney further states that Samuel Feldman, a prominent I. W. W. agitator, and several others from the same organization, are known to be interested in the calling of a waiters' strike at the Boston houses in question. The A. F. of L. locals are not in a position to interfere with the I. W. W. program, because of the repeated refusals of the owners to pay the prevailing wage rates.

Based on a 85-hour week, the union rate for waiters in this city calls for $40 a month, with meals, in hotels and clubs. The union restaurants pay $12 a week, with $2 extra for special men doing banquet work. If dress suits are called for in the last instance, an additional allowance of $1 is called for.

It is estimated unofficially, that the independents now have 300 members in addition, but this statement cannot be certified. The two A. F. of L. unions have a combined membership of 750 men, and are affiliated with Cooks' Union No. 24, as well as organizations whose No. is, which have 1700.

* * *

Three strong local unions, the Typographical, the Theatrical Stage Employes and the Newsboys, are on record as being opposed to the proposed measure to regulate the college of ball-room dancing. In each instance it is held that such a law could tend to drive wages down to below-living level.

CHORUS GIRLS VANISH.

Only the Ambitious Are Here Tomorrow.

"Gone are the chorus girls of yesterday." This was the decision of dainty Sadie Mullen of Lew Fields' All Star Company at "Hanky Panky" at the Shubert Theatre when discussing this important branch of the show business. "Those that are seen today," Miss Mullen continued, "are those who take their work seriously, study the business that they are engaged in and who seek intelligently for positions offering them the best chance for advancement. It is fair to assume that Miss Mullen is a pronounced type of the present day chorus girl. Any careful observer of the work of the chorus girls in a place like "Hanky Panky" cannot fail to pick out Miss Mullen and girls of her type. They are conspicuous through their efforts which outstrip the less ambitious and studious ones.

THE PRESS CAMP AT THE DURBAR AT DELHI

Charles Urban, the inventor of Kinemacolor, is the man to whom credit is due for the marvelous reproduction in motion and color, "The Durbar in Kinemacolor," now the attraction at Tremont Temple and royal command was given to Mr. Urban to record the crowning of King George and Queen Mary of England as Emperor and Empress of India, in view of the King's admiration for the series showing the coronation in England last Summer. Since that time the process has been immeasurably improved, and with the $100,000 placed at his command, Mr. Urban certainly did wonders, for with his corps of eight trained Kinemacolor camera men, he succeeded in taking every dazzling pageant and ceremonial in the color-films.

"King George," says Mr. Urban, "showed the greatest interest in the pictures, and his royal commands left nothing undone that would contribute to their success. On several occasions it was necessary for our staff operators to be placed high above the surrounding crowds on structures that would be absolutely free from vibration. For this purpose the government erected special stands of concrete.

"Every precaution was taken to guard against a rumored attempt to destroy the films. Armed soldiers guarded the section of the press camp where they were kept.

"Even the water used in developing the film was carefully tested to make sure that no harmful acids had been introduced into it. As a final precaution against theft or loss of each film was placed in a metal cylinder, and these cylinders were in turn placed in a huge wooden chest, which was bolted to the earth until time for shipment to England.

"The light in India proved wonderfully good. It was so favorable that we were able to take the great variety charge at the extraordinary rate of fifty-five pictures per second. I consider it from the wonderful motion picture ever taken—every single natural color is perfect and the military evolutions superb.

"In order that the presence of our operators should not mar the superb color scheme of the review, I had them dressed in colors which blended with their immediate environment. These on top of the partition were dressed in white, and those behind the soldiers in khaki. Each personal operator, who accompanied me everywhere, wore court costume. In all, we made about 60,000 feet of pictures on Indian soil."

RAINEY HUNTS LIONS WITH AMERICAN DOGS

African Nimrod First to Discover Mississippi Hounds Would Take Trail.

Paul J. Rainey, whose African hunt pictures are now being shown at the Park Theatre, was the first big game hunter to advance the theory that Mississippi bear hounds would trail and hunt lions. At first he was laughed at by all sportsmen as hitherto the most courageous of the canine family has always turned tail and fled at sight of a lion.

Mr. Rainey, however, decided that the Mississippi bear hound was adapted for this rough work. He secured a large pack of these dogs, all of them of fine pedigree, and then engaged a man to train them for their work.

When they first took up the Safari in Africa the dogs were taught to follow the spoor, or trail of a lion, and to ignore all other trails, and at first when a stray lion was shot they were compelled to come close to the animal and become perfectly familiar with it.

It was not until the party had been in Africa several months, and had been traversing the lion country for weeks, that Mr. Rainey finally decided to try out his theory and undertake a lion hunt with dogs. One morning his Masai trailers reported that lions were in the immediate vicinity and he gave orders to turn the dogs, which had been in training for over a week on the trail.

Inside of two hours this pack ran down and surrounded a 470 pound lioness, and when the hunters, riding swiftly horses, finally came up, the dogs were attacking the lioness.

Mr. Rainey was compelled to kill the lioness in order to save the dogs for only he had no doubt that they would kill her in the end, but he says that many of them were killed. From that time on the dogs were used every time a lion trail was discovered and during the expedition ninety-six lions in all were a tribute to their prowess.

TRIXIE FRIGANZA'S ADVICE.

Tells Girls to Keep Away from Gay White Way.

Stay away from the Broadway restaurant," is Trixie Friganza's advice to stage-struck girls. The late star of "The Sweetest Girl in Paris," who comes to Keith's Theatre this week, is perhaps better qualified than anyone else to give advice on this subject. Such a statement sounds rather like sour grapes, but "The average girl with theatrical ambitions does not have her middle eye in the centre of a Broadway stage," says Miss Friganza, "and so I'll be frank and state that her idea of theatrical success is a picture of a merry group in a Broadway restaurant in the wee small hours of the morning, with herself in the centre of the group, the latest fashion. It almost makes one sick at heart to see the pretty girls in the footlights, that are always your thoughts and ambitions should be centered. You will find plenty of pretty girls centered about the tables on the Great White Way, but the dropsies who have actually attained success in their profession are rarely, if ever, seen there.

Theatres Now Turn to Entertaining Folks Who Have to Remain in City.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

ABOUT all that is left of the theatrical season of 1911-12 is its hollow echo. Whatever claims the theatres may now advance for patronage will be made solely on the basis of Summer entertainment for such unfortunate citizens who remain in town while their wives, etc., seek refreshments in the country or at the seashore.

You might say that the last dying gasp of the departed season was uttered last night when Julian Eltinge and "The Fascinating Widow" moved out of the Boston Theatre, leaving that house dark and gloomy. It is true that Christie MacDonald and "The Spring Maid" will remain another week at the Tremont, and that "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is scheduled for another six days at the Plymouth, where high temperature and melodrama have been on friendly terms for several weeks—a strange condition in Boston. "Hanky Panky," too, is nearing the end of its stay at the Shubert, the final week being announced today. This was the "Summer musical play" that was to remain until July, and from the attention it received from playgoers during the early weeks of its visit, it seemed more than likely to hold the field against all comers.

With the changes now announced the Tremont will return to its old position as the Summer theatre of the town, for in another week Alice Lloyd and "Little Miss Fix-it" will move into that house for an extended engagement. At least, that is the plan now. With anything like an even break in weather, "Little Miss Fix-it" should prove an interesting and profitable investment for the Tremont.

* * * * * *

With the opening of Paragon Park last Thursday we returned to George A. Dodge's idea of the Continental cabaret. It may not be generally known that Mr. Dodge was the first to introduce the real cabaret into this country. Of course, there were curious so-called cabarets in other cities before Mr. Dodge employed the idea to keep visitors at Paragon Park from leaving on the last boat, which deprived him of more extended patronage in his Palm Garden. It is to Mr. Dodge's credit, however—if you can call it a mark of credit—that his first attempt at a cabaret show at Paragon was a faithful copy of the European article of the same name. None of the cabarets now running in the big restaurants in New York can be regarded as the real thing, possibly because the competition in creating that kind of entertainment forced its promoters into extensive vaudeville programs on raised stages. It is curious that while the Continental cabaret is too bold to be permitted in Boston, the authorities in Hull are less sensitive in that respect and Mr. Dodge moves forward without interference.

* * * * * *

During Mr. Craig's visit to Chicago, where he will present "The End of the Bridge" for a brief engagement, he expects to show the benighted people of that faraway town that his carefully organized stock company is the equal of nearly all of the traveling companies that journey westward with $3 attractions. Mr. Craig threatens to make the most of his opportunities when in Chicago, and if the playgoers there exhibit signs of genuine interest in his play he will doubtless repeat the experiment next season and possibly make these short tours into strange cities an annual feature. Mr. Craig's preparations for "The End of the Bridge" tour will keep him out of the present week's bill at the Castle Square Theatre. Miss Young and Mr. Hassel will also be absent in "The Climax" which will be given tomorrow. In presenting "The Climax" Mr. Craig has especially engaged members of the original company for the important roles.

* * * * * *

You might almost say that the Barnum & Bailey circus last week was outcircused by two moving picture attractions. It will at least be admitted that both the Rainey African hunt picture and kinemacolor pictures of the Durbar were alive with features that were peculiarly of a circus nature. Both attractions appear to be engaging public interest, and it is expected that they will remain in town for several weeks longer. It would not be fair to draw comparisons between the two sets of films—nor would it be easy. Both are spectacular—one brilliant with the pomp and ceremony that marked the entry of King George and his queen into India, where many millions of dollars were expended in making it the greatest celebration of recent times; the other thrilling and dramatic, showing the capture of Africa's wildest animals through the camera's keen eye. Each entertainment is sufficiently unique to earn extended attention.

* * * * * *

Mr. Morison will bring "The Typhoon" to the Majestic tomorrow. This will be the first presentation of this play in Boston, and it is rather expected that Mr. Morison may find himself involved in legal difficulties before the week is ended. "The Typhoon," like "The Devil" of a few years ago, is Hungarian in origin and does not have the copyright protection that German, French and English plays enjoy. "The Typhoon" as at present one of the successes of the New York season, having run through the late Winter into Summer without showing signs of declining interest. It is the promoters of the New York production who are expected to stop Mr. Morison. Curiously, Mr. Morison is not troubled over the prospect of an injunction. He declares that he is sure of his ground and any attempt to prevent the presentation of "The Typhoon" at the Majestic will not only fail, but will furnish him with a good amount of free advertising.

PARKS, THEATRES AND EXCURSIONS

Majestic Theatre.

In securing the right to produce "The Typhoon" at the Majestic Theatre this week Lindsay Morison not only shows enterprise in securing the latest offerings for his patrons, but in the language of the street, he has "put one over" on New York managers, who have been asserting that no play would not be seen in Boston until next season.

"The Typhoon," is at the present time being played in New York with wonderful success. In Boston the leading roles will be played by Howell Hansel and Miss Anna Cleveland. "The Typhoon" is a powerful play dealing with Japanese intrigue. It is full of intense situations and is replete with brilliant dialogue.

Castle Square Theatre.

"The Climax," which John Craig is presenting at the Castle Square on Monday for its first time at popular prices, has been aptly called a "society-drama." Its plot is simple and appealing, and it gives a picture of life among a middle family of struggling musicians in New York.

"The Song of the Soul" is sung by the heroine, and since the first production of "The Climax" it has become the most popular of modern songs. Mr. Craig has engaged a special company to act "The Climax," retaining from among the regular players of his last season Donald Meek and Mr. Christie, who will respectively appear as the father and son Goldfoot. Miss Florence Webber will be seen in the role of Adelina von Hagan, and Thomas E. Fatley will be seen as Dr. Reynold. Miss Webber, Mr. Christie and Mr. Fallon have all appeared in one of the original companies that played "The Climax" on the road.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

As the Summer time is the popular period for relaxation, B. F. Keith has attempted to follow out this idea in the selection of his warm weather attractions. The two principal features of this week's bill are Trixie Friganza and Dorothy Rogers & Co., both of whom are new to Boston vaudeville patrons. For her vaudeville tour Miss Friganza has secured an exceptionally strong repertoire of new and original songs. Dorothy Rogers and her company will appear in a farce-comedy entitled "Rudes a la Carte." Still another feature is the Chick Sale impersonator, in his Country School Entertainment. Others will be the three Leyes, violinist of musical fame; Kintinge Animals, with his trained cats, dogs, rabbits and pigeons; Cummings and Gladings, novelty entertainers; the Flying Russells, two daring aerial wonders, and several others.

National Theatre Gardens.

The new National Theatre Gardens has taken the people of Boston by surprise. For the second week Rambusser Rolfe has arranged an attractive program. He will have a number of special nights, introducing special features on each evening. The greatest of these will be the contest battle on Saturday evening. A number of new cabaret features will be heard with their new and popular arrangements. Burnice Tupper, the classic dancer will appear every evening, and Miss Helena Morrill, the soprano, Signors Boschetti and Manetta, Italian warblers, will have new programs.

Shubert Theatre.

On next Saturday night, June 8, "Hanky Panky" will have rounded out its seventh and final week of the long engagement at the Shubert Theatre. It is a strange coincidence that the engagement of "Over Night" which opened the season, was of seven weeks duration also, the latter play opening and the former closing a season of forty-eight weeks.

Park Theatre.

The Paul J. Rainey African Hunt Pictures are to be given a warm weather attraction at the Park and are entering upon their fourth week with no signs of abatement in the attendance or enthusiasm with which audiences greet them. The past week has seen a large attendance of ladies and children.

Globe Theatre.

The program for the week beginning tomorrow at the Globe will be of the same high-class order as usual at that house. Aside from the many vaudeville features, several thousand feet of new pictures will be shown, the picture program being changed on Thursday. The typists will be given as usual on Tuesday night, the "country store" on Thursday night and amateurs on Friday evening.

Norumbega Park.

There is no more beautiful spot in New England than Norumbega Park, and this season finds the grounds and all the other features just as alluring as ever. The big open air theatre is crowded twice daily with people who find the vaudeville show was the thing for warm weather entertainment. A new bill is announced for this week.

Tremont Temple.

Instantaneous has been the Boston success of "The Durbar in Kinemacolor," at Tremont Temple. Kinemacolor is a veritable reflection of nature and it was because of this that the company received a royal command to perpetuate the crowning of King George and Queen Mary of England as Emperor and Empress of India.

Tremont Theatre.

Christie MacDonald will conclude her long engagement at the Tremont Theatre next Saturday night, and will appear for the last time here in "The Spring Maid." This sprightly importation from Europe has served to increase Miss MacDonald's popularity in her home city.

Plymouth Theatre.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine" will enter upon its final week at the Plymouth Theatre tomorrow evening. Mr. Warner, who created and is still playing the title role, will not be seen again in the part. "The story of this successful play with its happy blending of tears and laughter, concerns a bank thief.

Orpheum Theatre.

The bill for the forthcoming week at the Orpheum Theatre is one with plenty of fun and frolic and features one of vaudeville's greatest musical comedies, "A Night on the Roof," with Ruth Lusby and Willie Dunlay and company of 17 people. A dozen other numbers will be found on the bill.

Scenic Temple.

During the coming week at the Scenic Temple there will be a splendid program, including leading vaudeville artists, photo-plays and illustrated songs.

Hub Theatre.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

Howard Athenaeum.

The old Howard closes tomorrow for the present season with a burlesque and vaudeville bill. The affair takes the form of a benefit tendered by the management to the employes of the theatre.

THE GREENROOM.

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed whereby the Empire Circuit of Western wheel burlesque shows will add Providence, R. I., to its circuit. One of the newest houses in that city has been secured, the deal being put through by H. Clay Miner of New York and George E. Lothrop of Boston. The Western wheel season in Boston ends the Howard and Grand Opera House.

* * *

TUESDAY, June 11, is the evening fixed for opening of the Summer season at the Tremont, and then an exceedingly popular comedienne in a successful musical play will return to the local stage. Alice Lloyd has a host of friends here in Boston, and they will be on hand on the occasion of the opening of the engagement at the Tremont in "Little Miss Fix It," which has scored a success all the way to the Pacific coast and back again. The new artificial cooling plant at the Tremont will be installed for the opening of the Summer season, should it prove to be a hot June night.

BANDMASTER RALFE WANTED BY SOCIETY

For several seasons Newport has been without a real fashionable attraction, but this season the members of society at this fashionable Summer resort mean to have something good. An agent said to represent Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont has been carrying on negotiations with B. A. Rolfe with the idea of bringing his symphony band to Newport following his season at the National Theatre Gardens. Nothing definite has yet been decided upon. Mr. Rolfe stated to the agent representing society that he would go providing he would receive the financial support of the Summer people. Plans are now being made in Newport to subscribe for the support of Mr. Rolfe's musical organization. Each subscriber will be allowed so many seats for the season.

It was intimated to Mr. Rolfe that his services would be desired about the first or middle of July, but he stated he would continue his contract with the National Theatre Gardens despite his offer of Newport.

Bass Point.

The season at Bass Point is now in full running order, with the hotels serving thousands of visitors. The cool breezes that always blow across the Nahant peninsula make Bass Point one of the most desirable of the easily accessible shore resorts.

PARAGON PARK IS DRAWING CROWDS

Another season has successful opened at Paragon Park and that means that the famous Palm Garden is once more entertaining every evening its full quota of guests who enjoy the Summer novelty of discussing the splendid cuisine here in the midst of such festive scenes as the beautiful electrical illumination of the park, the band concerts, and the Cabaret show. There are no less than seventy artists, singers and musicians engaged in this important feature of Paragon's amusements.

There are band concerts every Saturday and Sunday evenings.
